Selected Poetry.
PUNCH'S FLIGHT WITH RUSSELL.
P. M. Punch.
Up, up, my Lord John Russell—'tis a fair night for a fly—
Be thou a new Cleopatra—a new Asmodeus I! Come, clutch my cloak—and thro' the smoke together let us fly!
The life of London, huddled 'neath the blanket of the dark.
The moonlight falls on fair St. Paul's, on the Abbey, grim and grey;
Lo! the lamps, like fiery serpents, go winding far away;
Or, like glow worms, scattered, twinkle and wink up from below—
But 'tis not gaze on this fair sight that thro' the night we go.
Not a builded brick, or stone, or stick, on those wide acres thro'out
But bears a tongue within it—hath a language of its own;
In street, and square, and alley base, with a growth of human seed,
Is a great book spread beneath us—look down, my Lord, and read!
In steeples upward springing read prayer, struck into stone;
In lighted West-end houses read mirth, and warmth, and show;
In foul St. Giles's hovels read squalor, want, and woe.
There's a homily—hark to it! 'Tis the voice of Saffron Hill:
'I suffer, how I suffer from my freight of human ill!
All is filthiness without me; all is ignorance within;
I ache with cramps—I shake with damp—Oh! the warmth of glorious gin!"
And now for proof—off goes a roof—'Is that a house or hive?
Each bed's a room, each room a town, so packed and yet so airy!
Lo! the magpie life of London! And that happy, hapless hoard,
In foulness, in squalor fed, in work for you, my Lord!
Another and another, and the sight is still the same;
Suffering that knows no solace, and sin that knows no shame.
Hunger by thousand tables; savage life 'mid thousand schools;
Here are human hearts to frame anew—bethink you of the tools.
But hark! another voice is up, and pompously it booms
From well-strept tables, easy beds, and finely furnished rooms:
'I am Respectability; things must not go on so;
There's nowhere I can drive my gig, but something calls out woe.
'Then your sanitary meddles, all agog for drain and sewer—
For my part, all I know is, I wish the drains were fewer!
Poor folk will throw things down 'em—as for unwholesome air,
I know our streets' extremely sweet, and that's all my affair."
Whereon chimes in his Bumblebee, "You're right my worthy friend;
'Tis time this stuff and nonsense were brought out on end.
There's the Union Workhouse for the poor—you should see how we have broke 'em into temperance by short diet, into industry by skum."
But hark! that hoarse and hollow voice—"tis from a Newgate cell—
'Be silent, heartless blindworms! a different tale I tell;
I've wrestled crime for centuries, and feeble all I feel,
Tho' my bones are made of granite, and my sinews hammered steel.
'Ye little wot how hard and hot the tide of crime flows ever;
How it laughs my Canute talk to scorn, and mocks my stern edicts;
How low against east is cast before the fearful sea, which makes a plashing of the scourge, and a top of the gallows tree.
'Call Mother Church to help me; let Saint School do all she can;
Give them Christ Crime to fight with, and leave me the full-grown Man.
Or soon the evil speck my walls, and down forth with ye all!
Master Bumble, Sir Respectable, E'g. mace, cocked hat, and all!"
The stern words cease, and the stars look peace on the streets as still and grey—
And now to Downing-street, my Lord, with what appetite you may;
And bethink you of the lesson of London, read aright.
When with Punch for guide, you listened to the Voices of the Night.

Extracts from late English Papers.
THE SKATING REGIMENT.
From Chambers' Journal.
In Norway, the ground is covered with snow for three-quarters of the year, and not unfrequently to a depth of ten feet. When a thaw comes, it is only the surface of the mass that melts; and then the next frost of course covers the whole country with a crust of ice. In such circumstances, there is no getting along in the usual way. The people must all ascend the hills and dive into the valley in pursuit of game; they must traverse the heavy forests to gather wood for fuel; and they must still journey to the distant towns to bring food to their isolated hamlets. In three excursions, whether long or short, they use skates. Skating is with them neither a mere amusement nor a gymnastic exercise; it is a means of locomotion which the nature of the ground renders indispensable; a man who could not skate would be unable to walk to any useful purpose.
It is melancholy to think that one of the most delightful winter customs has, like many other things good in themselves, been pressed into the service of war. In the army of Norway, there is a company of skaters, dressed in the dark-green of English riflemen, and armed merely with a slight musket slung upon the shoulder, and a dagger-wound. They are likewise provided with iron-pointed staffs, 7 feet long, resembling those used by the Swiss when traversing the glaciers; which serves to balance them as they sweep along the ice, and which they strike deep into the ground when they desire to stop in their headlong career. The staffs also indicate the position of the riflemen for their pieces when they fire. Their skates are of a peculiar construction, being singularly long; and when thus used, it is a strange sight, in time of peace like the present, an amusing one, to see this light company, climbing with ease the icy hills, gliding down their precipitous sides, and striding, as Klopstock says, with winged feet over the water, translated into solid ground, as if in defiance of the common laws of nature.
Skating was known to the ancestors of the Northmen, if we take the date assigned by some authors to the Edda as evidence, eight centuries ago; the good Ulfur, being represented in the Scandinavian scriptures as remarkable for his beauty, his prowess, and his skates. The exercise is not mentioned by the Greek and Roman writers, though so well acquainted with all other gymnastics; but Klopstock, Goethe, Herder, and other German poets, sing the praises of the art. In Holland, it is practiced, as in Norway, not for its gracefulness, but for its utility; and there it is common for the country people to skate to market. During the famous expedition of Louis XIV. this art of locomotion was used against the Dutch themselves in one of the most curious and daring exploits recorded in history. When the states were in peace, the officers offered by the pride of Louis were so numerous, that the people were open their sluices, and laid their ocean water. The frost after a time, however, rendered even this unavailing; and at length Gen. Luxembourg, one dark and freezing night, mounted twelve thousand men on skates, and sent them over the ice from Utrecht to surprise the Hague. The result is given as follows by a writer who takes his facts from a French historian:—
'When they left Utrecht, it was clear frost weather, and the effect of the moon and stars upon the eyes shone, was truly magical. By degrees, as they advanced, the visible horizon of the earth was obscured by vapor, and they could see nothing around, above, or beneath them, but a regular expanse of ice, bounded at the edge by thick grey clouds, and canopyed by the stary curtain of the sky. The strange glowing sound which ever and anon boomed along the frozen wilderness, had at first something inexpressibly terrific to imagination; and as it died fitfully away in the distance, the space surrounding them seemed extended almost to infinity. The sky at length was gradually covered by the vapour rising, as if from the edges of the circle of earth; a veil of dull and hazy white overcast the heavens and obscured the stars; and a dim round spot of watery brightness was the only indication of the site of the moon, by which alone they could steer their course.
'A rapid thud had come on; their skates sunk deeper and deeper into the ice at every step; and at last, the water gathering upon the surface, as it was agitated by the night wind that had now risen, assumed the appearance of a sea. The wind increased; the sky grew blacker and blacker, their footing became more spongy and insecure; they plunged almost to the knee; and the ice groaned and cracked beneath them. Every one looked on himself as lost; and the honors of a fate hitherto untold in story, and appearing to belong neither to the fortunes of the land nor of the sea, appalled the boldest imagination.
'At length a faint twinkling light appeared in the distance, sometimes seen and sometimes hid in the varying atmosphere; and they had the satisfaction so as it was, of at least knowing the relative bearings of the place on which they were about to perish. The light proceeded from a strong fire in the enemy's hands, impenetrable without cannon; and what added bitterness to their misery was the knowledge that beyond this fort was a dike, which in all probability afforded a path, however narrow and muddy, by which they could have returned to Utrecht. The fort however, was the gate of this avenue of safety; and even if it was defended for a single day, they would be swallowed up by the waters, in the continuance of the thaw, or perishing miserably through cold and fatigue. But any thing so indolently sound them as a doubtful career into stone walls or cannon shot; and they determined at least to make a rush upon the impenetrable masonry of the fort, and provoke the fire of its defenders. It is impossible to account for the result. It may have been that the sight of so large a body of men rushing in upon them, as if from the open sea, their numbers multiplied and even their individual forms distorted and magnified in the mist, struck a panic terror into the hearts of the garrison; while this may have been increased by the shouts of courage or despair, mingling wildly over the icy waste and depicting like the voices of demons with the rising wind. But however it was the gates of the fort opened at their approach, and the helpless and half-frozen adventurers rushed in without striking a blow.

Dr. Newman, the Poet, first and then, (what is nearly identical) a Roman Catholic, with other Englishmen, similarly situated, he soon conceived the idea of entering the establishment of the Abbey in Oxford, that they may subsequently establish in England a congregation of the order, and Pope Pius has hitherto seconded the prosecution of the plan. He gave notice to the very Reverend Father Tassin, Abbe of the Monastery of the Holy Cross of Jerusalem, that it was his desire that those future children of St. Philip of Noire should be received into this monastery during the time of their novitiate, to form themselves there. This was done, the father applied to disposing of the opposite part of his monastery to serve as a dwelling for Dr. Newman and his companions, who established themselves there towards the end of the month of June. On the 9th of August, at seven o'clock in the evening the Holy Father paid them a visit. Father Tassin went to meet his Holiness in the avenue leading to the Monastery, soon the other monks, the new Oratorians & M. Wiseman, the Apostolic Vicar in England surrounded the Pope at the door of the Convent. After having admitted all this happy party to the kitchen the first mention to the utmost leniency of the Court in the apartment of Father Romi, the Pope at prayer of Father Tassin, visited the part of the Convent devoted to the new guests. During this visit, he conversed freely with Mr. Wiseman, and otherwise made himself agreeable.
MARRIAGE OF A ROMAN CATHOLIC POET.
The Cork Constitution says:—We need not say that the following comes to us from a credible source, for such a letter we could not insert, any but the most satisfactory authority. A young lady has reached us on the same subject, but enters into particulars which we are not permitted to follow.
EXTRAORDINARY MARRIAGE.
The extraordinary marriage between a Roman Catholic Clergyman, and an Anglican daughter of an M. D. the determination of the Reverend Gentlemen seems gratuitous, and of imperfect, unpropitious persons will wish to see his fair bride "God speed." "Marriage is honorable in all men," and as the late Mr. D. O'Connell wrote through an act of Parliament in his own M. P. for Clare county, and called emancipation, the Rev. Mr. Abner has been the ice, and henceforth celibacy will be no longer the scandal and snare of the Romish priesthood. Mr. Abner's fortitude is, therefore, to be much applauded. The fact of the marriage is notorious, and you can publish this or not, as you wish.

CHEAPEST RATES OF ANY OFFICE DOING BUSINESS IN CANADA.

THE undersigned having been appointed to act as Agent for this Company, which has been doing business in Canada and this City since the year 1839, respectfully requests persons requiring Life Assurance, to call at his Office, PRINCESS STREET, Kingston, where Prospectuses and all necessary information will be given—Also, a variety of Tables, to meet the circumstances and convenience of applicants, can be seen.
The Rates of similar Tables in the U.S. being doing business in this Province, are as follows:—

Colonial Life Assurance Co., age 30—£2 4 s
National Life Assurance Co., do—5 2 s
Britannia Assurance Co., do—2 0 s
These moderate Rates, (little more than sufficient to provide for losses), are in the power of most persons to assure; and with reference to the present state of the health of the inhabitants of the Province generally, it may be thought necessary, should the prevailing sickness increase, to decline taking any risks. It appears therefore to be a duty on those who have to provide for their families to take the timely precaution of assuring their lives, and thus provide against the risk of perishing before they are enabled to suffer difficulties, if not destitution.
