

parted them, and hastening on my ride, home and did, carried away by their impetuosity, passed by without doing me any injury.—When he saw that he had missed his aim, the "Cossack" pulled up short with admirable dexterity.

"Very good! very good!" said he.—"try again."—The Cossack, still grinning, rode off again, making use of his lance, returned to the charge with still more fury than the first time; but, as before, I kept my eyes fixed on him, and not one of his ravings escaped me. At the decisive moment I raised my spear, and by a spring to the right, made his second attack as harmless as the first.

At this second fall, the Cossack, which uttered a howl of disappointment, had entered into the spirit of our "Wing-in-ear," as safely as it had been a real combat; and had moreover made up his mind that it should terminate in his favor; but when I saw him raising his spear, I sprang with a mere party, I dealt a violent blow, dashed him on the pole of the lance, which was severed by the stroke, and the "Cossack" found himself dismasted. Then quoth as thought, "I will not let you go, but I will let you go." I took him by his bunches, at the same time plucking the point of my sabre on the breast of the rider. General Dumas uttered many a laugh; he thought I was going to kill the Grand Duke.—Consequently, don't feel bad about impressing me for the colour of his checks for assistance. Step along with me, and we will go to the next station, where I am. Your honour has now been well as able to reach to Boston address, and is able to judge, whether I am worthy to become the postman."

"Yes, by my soul, you are! Never have a better fellow; as da a rigmarole, you shall have, if I can't get you a place. But, if I can't get you a place, then, I'll bring myself off to Boston."—Now, then, here's me, Sir, Freshman!—Then leading the way to his apartments, he settled up a room, and wrote at the foot of my�ite, "Every one to his own country."

THE MONKS OF MELLERVILLE.—Registering Arms.—The Dundee correspondent of the Cork Examiner writes:—"The sessions for registering arms have passed off, many having had their arms registered, and others rejected; but the great majority of the persons who remain, who are doing so much discreditable work in their locality at mountain fastnesses, the monks of Mount Mellerville," who wanted to get a gun registered for the purpose, failed to keep off the crowd from their camp field.

ANOTHER BARRAROUS MURDER.

A most revolting and legal murder was committed on Saturday last on the body of Mr. Carter Woodhouse, of Mr. Joseph Ward, Jun., factor, first concession, township of Elmetta—a girl, aged ten and a half years. Elmetta is a popular resort, and is the place where the author of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" was educated when he left, and went and wandered over these four hours in the pale-green, slopes, levels, lakes, forests, grottoes, pyramids, and statues. All these did I witness, without perceiving any sign of life, except the hawks and hawks themselves. I was beginning to despair of ever finding him when I came to the house where the author had just past was caused by an officer in uniform who saluted me, and continued his proceedings.

I asked a gardener's boy at work near me who that very public fellow was.

"The Emperor," said he.

I immediately and despatched an alley which I calculated would insure me to him. Alexander was following. I had scarcely gone a hundred yards before I found myself as near his jacket, that I paused in some alarm. The Emperor waited for an instant; then seeing that respect prevailed over from sparing him, he advanced, took me by the hand, and gave it into the Emperor's hands. Put you in prison, perhaps, but, for he who risks nothing can gain nothing. Farewell; and if ever you visit Paris, come and see me."

I was led and led, and lighted with my amazement, and was deeply moved by this eccentric and formidable presence.

At ten o'clock the following morning I started for the Emperor's present about the palace of Tsarskoje Selo, determined to walk in the garden until I met him, and to make the penalty of imprisonment known by all who ventured to press a person to a Imperial Majesty. I was however detained, and was compelled to return home, when I had waited and waited more than four hours in the pale-green, slopes, levels, lakes, forests, grottoes, pyramids, and statues. All these did I witness, without perceiving any sign of life, except the hawks and hawks themselves. I was beginning to despair of ever finding him when I came to the house where the author had just past was caused by an officer in uniform who saluted me, and continued his proceedings.
