

SOME MAFFERS AND THE LADIES.

A few days ago, it is said, four ladies in the height of fashion paid a visit to the rebel chief Sandilli, at his residence in Drosdy; a well-known gallant and witty colonel acting as treasurer to the party. With considerable address, and the aid of some of the rebels, he had every vestige of fashion managed to cover. Some plausible pretences through the narrow doorway only intended for a horse to enter, of a chieftain's apartment without much damage, and the party stood fronting the group of wandering savages. Sandilli reclined on an iron hospital-stretcher, in graceful attitude, with his regal tiger-skin karses carelessly thrown over him. His brother, a splendid specimen of a rude Kaffie, stood on his left, in all the pride of native dignity, where fine limbs and well-developed muscles no thought or wrappage could conceal in their growth. The perfect model for a scoundrel and most strange contrast to the modest and figure of his grotesque millionaire-made visitor. Around these two we find, sitting and standing, the other councillors, about a dozen, in various attitudes and stages of Kaffi-no-fashion, some of nature, others blanched and karossed. After a scrutinizing examination of the various figures comprising this picturesque group of the tribe of Kaffiland and much disquisition on the part of the ladies as to the relative merits of the ancient Grecian Statues, &c., Sandilli was requested to stand up and "show himself." The party wished to know who the ladies were that he should be in their presence. "Tell him," said one, "he is here to color to the interpreter; tell him they are my wives, and that I have another at home; and ask what he thinks of them." "Fix, Colouer," twitted one young lady, "how can you tell the chief such nonsense?" The interpreter explained, the chief laughed and whispered to his brother, who laughed also, and the laugh went around the circle, all staring at the four fashionable ladies, who began to laugh too at the hilarity the had occasioned amongst the savages. "Tell us what they are, and why about?" said Miss —. "I am sure, Sandilli is laughing so merrily." "Oh, yes, Colonel," entreated Miss —, "pray let the interpreter ask him." The interpreter did not bat, but was seized with such an immoderate fit of laughing that he could not stop himself. The ladies joined again, and the scene became really quite exciting. The interpreter seemed hamsid when pressed to give the merry chief's reply, and the curiosity of the ladies of course made them still more importunate for an explanation of the fun. "What does he say?" quoth the Colonel. "He says, Sir, you are likely to have some female for them, if they appear." Suddenly the room darkened, hostiles are squaring themselves frantically through the narrow doorway, helping to wedge each other through, &c., and the party is soon seen in rapid flight scampering home along the green, followed by the mischievous colonel.—Sky's African Journal.

AN EXTRAORDINARY PHENOMENON.

We have received a circumstantial description of an extraordinary appearance in the heavens which, on the morning of Saturday last, was witnessed by two men who were out in a fishing boat off Quigley's Point, in Longue-Pointe. At a former period this strange phenomenon, for which the known laws of optics account only imperfectly, would have been regarded as proof of supernatural agencies; but the Fall of Moreau of Italy, and the similar appearance frequently witnessed in high Arctic latitudes, as well as around some parts of the Austrian coast, demonstrate the essential reference of all these optical wonders to some natural law, which science has yet thoroughly to investigate. From the character of the men to whom, in the present case, we allude, not the slightest doubt can be entertained in regard to the fidelity of their statement, which is, in substance, the following:—That while on Saturday morning last, about 2 o'clock, they were in a boat fishing off Quigley's Point, they observed a phenomenon of a very strange description.—At the hour we have mentioned the sky was of a more ordinary dark and lurid aspect, so much so that the men were astonished that there would be a heavy fall of rain, when almost immediately the clouds to the westward parted, and an opening, as it were, of a reddish hue became visible, to which their attention was directed. Then there appeared a regiment of men in uniform; and so massive was the representation that the dress of the officers could be easily distinguished from those of the men. This passed away in a panoramic manner, and was quickly succeeded by the view of two large semi-circled vessels of war under full sail, which traversed the same space as their predecessors on the scene, and lengthened as far as the eye could see. This mysterious vision was not, however, so extended, for their wondering eyes notwithstanding the absence of two human forms male and female, standing with their backs towards each other, as if engaged in conversation; and on word was the outline of these figures that they distinguished the male from the female, the former being apparently clothed in a frock coat. This great personation of humanity occupied about the same space of time as the two first mentioned.—This most bewildering scene was closed by the appearance of a sun and a præsident moving and disappearing; after which the sun again assumed the number four, which it wore previously in this strange vision. Our informant stated that one of the men who witnessed this scene was filled with the greatest terror, judging its continuance.—Derry Sentinel.

THE ESTATE OF AN IRISH LANDOWNER.—The first great example of the working of the Irish Estates Bill is to be found in the following significant paragraph:

"A Galway paper states that the most extensive estate in Ireland is about to change hands." This can only refer to the estate of Mr. Martin, of Galway, in which surface extent may be considered a principality, though otherwise of sufficiently limited value. The incumbrances thereon are said to be enormous, and the statement made, is that the owner is to have £50,000 for his interest, the purchaser assuming all liabilities."

This estate, which is larger than the English Counties, belonged to the late eccentric but humane Mr. Martin, M. P., who was the author of the Act against cruelty to animals. At his death, a few years since, the estate descended to his only daughter, who, about two years ago, married her cousin, a young gentleman of the name of Bell. The estate was mortgaged to the extent of £360,000; and last year some of the proprietor's sheep and cattle were distanced for poor rates. The entrance-gate and lodges are about 20 miles from the mansion house.

THE SMALL AGENTS OF GREAT MISCHIEF.

The Irish rebel chiefs are now the laughing stock of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear, who should be more so?—the people of Ireland have so ruined a portion of the people who have less power and contemptible. There is this satisfaction in having to do with potent agents of great mischief, that when they are crushed, successors of equal abilities are not to be found, and the bad cause is abandoned in despair want of leaders. The treasonable block of the world; but, paradoxical as it may appear