POETICAL, EFFUSIONS. - Directing letters in poetry seems now to be the prevailing novelty among a great many. Prose as a means of communication is common; the inventive Str Spartan, Montreal, McNee & Waddell, geni must find some new means of conveying their sentiments to one another. The above is not a late practice, still it is a change from the Schr Agnes, Oswego, P. Conroy, 100 sacks ordinary way of doing things. The effusions are not generally strictly poetic—they are a kind of nondescript production, in which, however, the writer manages to run his thoughts in pretty good rhyme, as the fol-ston will show: "Now, Mr Postman, do look bright, And give this letter to Old Bob W_____, It is likely you will find him tight, For he drinks rye whiskey day and night; And if across him you cannot come, Put it in Box 431, For he is well versed in law. And lives in the city of Ottawa."

CURIOSITIES OF A GIPSY BALL. I heard a shoemaker of Holywell, North Wales, telling how the gipsy belles had come to him and ordered the most expensive red merocco dancing boots with blu heels that were procurable for money.
