We know too well the meaning of such words to use them with undue haste, and in a matter of this kind we ought certainly to be no more nor less careful than a minister of the gospel.

But having said so much we have no wish to continue the quarrel with either of the reverends. We are sorry that their zeal has outrun their discretion, and that in a manner of purely secular politics, toe much of the odium theologicum has crept in. We refused to publish Mr Wilson's letter. If he had sent the same document to our served in the same way, but having got new light on the subject, he was in duty bound to let it be known. He has done so, He is satisfied, and so are we.

It now only remains to notice the very remarkable letter of Mr King. We should advice that gentleman either to keep copies of his letters or a better memory. In all cessary delay, or a very great responsibility his published manifestoes hitherto he has will rest upon the civic authorities, should invariably asserted that Mr McKellar had the disease increase in severity or an epidenothing whatever to do with the Elgin As: mic set in. We are also astonished to find that so ardent a disciple of the Globe has not been the papers aforesaid, he jumps to the conclusion that no such report appeared, that no such meeting was held, and in fact that the whole thing is a series of statements comtaining "no truth."

The reverend gentleman evidently accepts matters with a very easy grace, and we de not wonder that he has been victimized by "faithless agents.". We have now done with him. It is none of "our funeral," and we should not have noticed the matter further were it not that he and his friends are such excellent targets, that one cannot help taking a shot at them once in a while.
