Many of the members we know thing is in the worst possible taste, and should by no means be allowed to pass without the sharpest censure. If the dinner had taken place last November all would have been well; but instead, the triumph of a party is postponed until the celebration of it will rankle in men's minds during a time when all should be working for the common good. If it were a Parliamentary dinner, irrespective of party, we could well understand its being held on auch a night, but for one pelitical party to arrange for a triumphant glorification ever their opponents on the eve of the assembly of Parliament, will not fail to cause harsh feelings which would be better allowed to slumber at such a time. We believe the precedent, like too many others on the Grit side, is a bad one, and we hope that no other political party will ever so far forget itself as to celebrate its triumph in the face of the
