every Sunday afternoon from 41 to 50'clock. THE HUMAN HEART.

Each heart has a depth that it cannot sound, A bound that it may not know-It has feelings varied as flowers of earth, And affections which warmly glow.

It knows its seasons of hopes and fears, Its ioys and its grievous cares-Its mingled emotions of evil and good, Its calms and its secret prayers.

Some are noble and true, aspiring high, Gaining strength from a Higher Power-While others are fixed upon things of earth, And but live for the passing hour.

And many there are which, strong and brave, Heed neither scorn nor slight-But others, more sensitive, shrink away From a cold world's chilling blight.

Ah! restless, irresolute human heart. That is "wavering, tossed like the sea," Is thy peace to be gained from an earthly

Where dest thou for comfort flee? "Come unto me," saith the Lord thy God, "A new heart I will thee give, Resist temptation and power of sin. And grace will be thine to live."
