As yet to thee this world has been A smooth and placid wave; Its wants and cares thou'st never seen. Nor doest thou dread the woes between The cradle and the grave.

May few things ruffle thy repose, Nor sorrow dim thine eye. Except to melt at others' woes When sensibility bestows A sigh on misery.

May other feelings prove, When some soft glance of our own eye, Some half express'd and touching sigh May teach thee how to love. Perchance thy fond one may command All that is just and true .

In woman's dawn thy heart, dear girl,

A soul to mount o'er follies' land; A tear for pity, and a hand Open to charity. If such a being prove thy love, Oh, never cease the lover! On him your heart's best feelings pour,
