The International University boat race the preparations for which have occupied so much newspaper and sporting attention on both sides of the Atlantic for the past few weeks, was contested on the Thames this afternoon at the appointed hour of five o'clock. The race was gallantly won by Oxford in a closely contested struggle the decisive victory of three lengths attesting the superiority of the Oxonian crew and of the English as against the American system of rowing, of which it was held that this race would be a test. We presume that there can be no room to doubt the fairness of the race, due particulars respecting which will soon be forthcoming. Allowing for the difference of local time between Kingston and Lon don, which has the effect of ante-dating despatches from England, the fact of the result of the race was received at this office within half an hour of the event itself. The rapidity of communication between the two continents afforded by the Atlantic cable is emphatically illustrated by the circumstance
