There is no middle course for the Italian Government. Gen. La Marmora, the Governor of Rome, has said, and the Minister of tion of Rome has reached the point when it has become to us a question of existence, Finance has repeated his words, "The quesand behind us is the abyss." The Pope, in his paper, says once more, distinctly, that he and his party will never, never yield and so the case stands. The King is a little frightened, as he is made to beat the principal brunt of the Pope's rancorous condemnation, which is hardly fair, as the Constitution makes the Sovereign a leading agent only, and less responsible than the Ministry of Parliament.

In England, at the outbreak of hostilities, many people raised the usual cry that the trade of Great Britain would be stimulated by the Continental war. No doubt, so far as munitions of war, and perhaps horses go, this has proved to be true; but as regards nearly everything else the fact is precisely the reverse. Of British cotton and linen manufactures, France has taken since the war hardly more than one-third the quantity she took in the corresponding months of 1 1866; and in the same time France has sold to England about one-third more than last Tear of such leading commodities as the various manufactures of silk and wine. It is all very well to say that the cessation of competition in certain industries gives a monopoly to the non-belligerent manufacturer; but if the demand for the product shrinks in an equal or greater proportion, the advantage disappears; and feverish activity in one or two branches of trade affords slender compensation for lethargy in all the rest.
