MONTREAL NATURAL HISTORY SOCIETY.

The usual monthly meeting of this society was held on Monday evening, October 26. The President, Principal Dawson, F. R.S., &c., &c., in the chair.

The following paper "On the finding of the remains of a Mastodon at Dunnville, Ontario," was read by E. Billings, Esq., F.G.S.

Notes on the bones of a Mastodon found near Dunnville, Ont. 1868.

On reading the announcement in the papers of the finding of the bones of a Mastodon, near Dunnville, two weeks ago, I left Montreal by the first train for the locality. On arriving there, I found that the accounts were somewhat exaggerated. The remains were not so large as had been reported, and besides were in a very poor state of preservation. The tusks had almost entirely disappeared, there remaining only two or three small fragments, about a foot long and one or two inches thick. No part of the head remained, except the posterior portion of the right ramus of the lower jaw. There are seven molar teeth with the enamel, as usual, well preserved. There is a nearly perfect thigh bone and several other bones of the legs and feet, most of them more or less broken and decayed. There are a few of the vertebræ, some fragments of the ribs, and a number of other imperfect bones.

On examining the teeth, I found the remains to be those of the common American species Mastodon Ohioticus or Tridactylodon Ohioticus, according to Dr Falconer's classification. Judging from the size of the teeth and femur, I should say that this animal was a mastodon of medium size, perhaps nine feet in height. I do not think the tusks could have been fourteen feet long. The longest and most perfect skeleton of this species known is that which was mounted by the late Dr. Warren of Boston, and which is now, I believe, in one of the museums of that city. It measures seventeen feet in length from the front part of the face to the insertion of the tail, and is a little over eleven feet in height. The tusks are about eleven feet in length, and it seems probable, therefore, that those of the Dunnville skeleton were not so long.

The remains were found in a swamp, about one and a half mile north of Dunnville, partly embedded in a layer of fine sand, holding fresh water shells of species now living in our rivers, lakes and ponds. The sand is two and a half feet thick, resting upon boulder clay, and is covered by one and a half feet of black vegetable mould. None of the bones, as I understand, were found in the clay, but they partly projected up out of the sand into the mould. It is clear, therefore, that this animal lived long after the close of the glacial period.

From Dunnville I went to the Niagara Falls, where there are presented, in Mr Barnett's museum, a nearly perfect lower jaw of a small mastodon from St. Thomas, Ontario. The molars are all in place, and the specimen is interesting, as it retains the two small tusks that are seen in the young mastodons, but not in the adult. Mr Barnett has a number of other teeth and lower jaws, both of the mastodon and mammoth, which he has collected from different places in the western part of Ontario. There are three molars of the mastodon in the Provincial Museum from London, besides the collection of mammoth's bones from Hamilton. These are all the fossil elephantine remains that have been collected in Canada to my knowledge.

It is worthy of note that none of these remains were collected east of the western extremity of Lake Ontario. It would seem that when the mastodon and mammoth roamed over Canada, the distribution of land and water was somewhat different to what it is now. The great escarpment (usually called the Niagara ridge) which runs from Lewiston to Hamilton and thence to Owen Sound, formed a shore of only a few feet in height, and all west of it was a low flat country abounding in swampy land, where grew the cedar, spruce, and other evergreens, upon whose leaves and twigs the mastodon appears to have subsisted. Easterly there was a great fresh water sea that covered a large area of the present dry land of Canada and of the neighbouring States. No remains of these animals have been found in Canada at any place east of Hamilton; and it is not difficult to show that those collected there had been drifted down from the interior in the river that once flowed through the ravine at Dundas. In the States they have been collected in numerous localities all over the country, to some point so far west as Massachusetts. A line drawn north-easterly from Hamilton to New Brunswick would, according to our present knowledge, form the north-western boundary of the country inhabited by the mastodon and mammoth in the Dominion.

After some discussion on the subject of the paper, in which Principal Dawson and others joined, a vote of thanks was tendered to Mr Billings for his interesting paper.

The King of Prussia aims to sustain the parental relation toward his army. Recently at an early review on the banks of the Rhine he saluted each passing regiment with a loud "Good morning, my children." The soldiers replied with equal heartiness, "Good morning, father," which seemed to please the old monarch greatly.

The John Jacob Astor of St. Lewis has gone to his final rest, a character wellnigh as notorious as Mr Ewes, the hero of the "Book of Odd Sketches." In a rickety old two storey building on St. Charles street, used alike for office and dwelling, there has lived for many years old Isaac Walker. Witless and with one foot in the grave, any morning for the past ten years he could have been seen in his den of an office on the first floor, arranging papers, assorting kegs, and counting money. He spoke with no one save on business; friendships he had none; money was his sole passion and aim. A stern landlord, he was commonly known as "Old Walker," and his cheap tenement houses and buildings all over the city brought him an enormous income. When the Lindell Hotel was burned some years since, although his property lay all around it, and its re-erection would have greatly enhanced his land, still he refused to give a cent. Mr Walker departed this life on Wednesday of last week, leaving an estate worth from seven to ten millions of dollars.

CRUELTY TO CHILDREN.

In Rochester, N. Y., a woman named Mary Swingler has just been sentenced to the penitentiary for six months for abominable cruelty towards her adopted daughter, seven years old. The Union says:

It was alleged by the prisoner that the little girl had stolen some candy, and it was to deter her from committing further thefts that she punished her in the manner she did. By roasting the little one's hands over the stove she said she intended to give her an idea of what hell is, a place to which she would surely go if she stole any more. She thought it her duty to punish the child to save its soul from perdition, and nothing could so well convey her idea of perdition to the little one's tender mind as roasting its hands over a "young hell," the withering fire of a cooking stove. The exclamations of the girl—"Oh mother, it hurts!" "Oh! mother, it hurts awfully!" and the noise of the crackling flesh, did not make the woman desist, and only the interference of neighbours prevented her from inflicting injuries which would doubtless have proved permanent. But few women in this city have a more benevolent and peaceable-looking countenance than hers.

Another horrible story comes from Worcester, Mass.: Mrs Catharine Connor, residence on Foyle street, committed a series of outrages on her little daughter last week, that should draw down upon her head the hottest of indignation. Last Friday night, bitter and biting in its extreme coldness, she stripped the little Lizzie, who is about eleven years old, and turned her naked into the cold night and dark street. The little thing laid down under a tree and cried herself to sleep. The same inhuman treatment was practised on the succeeding night, and on Saturday morning the child was found and cared for by a kind neighbour. An appeal was made to the mother for the child's clothes, but she refused to give them up, and since the child has been fed and clothed by strangers.

The Agricultural Society at Vineland, New Jersey, has offered prizes for the best roads made and kept in order by private enterprize. The matter is yet an experiment, but we doubt not it will prove a benefit to those living within the territory where competition is to take place.

The Ottawa News says the saw logs now rolling down the Gatineau have seen a few dozen cascades in their time. The bark has been quite peeled off them. They have been taken from near the upper reaches of the Gatineau, a river over 400 miles long. Those in charge say they have had a six months voyage.

The Caughnawaga Indians, we learn, have expelled two whole fac s from their settlement. They have long been annoyed by French Canadians coming into their village, keeping little grog-shops contrary to law, stealing wood from the lands of the Indians, and attempting to 'squat' on their reserves. Last week the Indians gave them notice to quit—a notice which was freely generally obeyed. A few whites still remain, but these are threatened with forcible expulsion if they do not at once pack up and leave.

A despatch from St. John says: The Paris crew arrived on Tuesday evening from Springfield and had a most enthusiastic reception. The city was nearly covered with flags, and almost the entire population turned out to witness their arrival. Every window along the line of route was filled with ladies, and for a time business was almost entirely suspended. The volunteer artillery turned out in uniform and fired a salute as the steamer came up to the wharf. The subscription lists for the $2,000 testimonial have been filled.

Brighton, England, is to have an immense marine aquarium, twelve hundred and fifty feet long and with a proportionate width. A company has been formed, and the Town Council will probably contribute the sum of £8,000 towards the construction of this aquarium, which will be one of the chief attractions of a place already one of the most popular of English seaside resorts.

The following ballerdash appears in the New York papers of Monday: "A meeting of the Executive Committee of the Fenian Brotherhood was held yesterday afternoon at the headquarters of the order, No. 10 West Fourth street, at which the president, General O'Neill, presided. The business of the meeting was of a nature not to be made public, but it is understood to have relation to the purchase of several steamers and war material, the negotiations for some of which had previously been completed. The organization is active and vigorous, notwithstanding the comparative quiet that has attended its operations."

An enthusiastic French sportsman went to a breakfast given in sign of the commencement of the shooting season. The talk was of game, when suddenly in rushed a servant exclaiming to the host that a hare had been seen moving about on the lawn. Out went the enthusiastic sportsman, gun in hand, fired at the hare, and missed him. The hare, scratching his nose, stood up on his hind legs, presented a horse pistol at the enthusiastic sportsman, and fired in return. No one was hurt; but the enthusiastic sportsman was naturally astounded, until at last it was explained to him that the hare was a performing animal which had been hired from a neighbouring show. The sportsman's charge had, of course, been tampered with by the confidential servant.

The Swedish and German expeditions to the North Pole have failed for this year—the Germania having gone as far as any one except Sir E. Parry. That great sailor reached, in his boat expedition of 1827, the high latitude of 82 deg. 45 min. N., and only desisted when the solid ice over which he struggled to force his way northwards was itself carried to the south. More way than he could make by pushing ahead was lost through this terrible drift; and all he could do was to get his way back to the old Hecla and return home. A few weeks ago it seemed tolerably certain that the Germania would cap Parry's achievement, but the farthest northern point she reached was 81 deg. 6 min.

The Prince of Anhalt, so states Le Nord, was going out for a walk the other morning when he was startled by the apparition of a sentinel in a blue tunic and pointed helmet—in fact, in Prussian uniform—on guard. "Sapristi!" exclaimed his Serene Highness, with a start, "so I have been annexed during the night. Bismark is quite capable of that sort of thing." However, he sends to inquire, and learns, to his great satisfaction, that he is still the father of the Anhalt peoples. But, then, what is the meaning of this Prussian uniform worn by one of his own soldiers? It appeared that the generalissimo of the Anhalt Dessan Cothen Duchy had thought the change desirable, and he sent this man up as a specimen. Perhaps the said warrior was of an economic turn of mind, and thought it might save expense to Prussianise the Anhalt army at once. Seeing that the whole duchy measures but twenty-eight square kilometres, its fate is so inevitable that perhaps he was right.

Coughs and Colds.

Sudden changes of climate are sources of Pulmonary, Bronchial, and Asthmatic affections. Experience having proved that simple remedies often act speedily and certainly when taken in the early stages of the disease, recourse should at once be had to "Brown's Bronchial Troches," or Lozenges. Few are aware of the importance of checking a cough, or "common cold," in its first stage. That which in the beginning would yield to a mild remedy, if neglected soon attacks the Lungs. "Brown's Bronchial Troches," or Cough Lozenges, allay irritation which induces coughing, having a direct influence on the affected parts. As there are imitations, be sure to obtain the genuine. Sold by all dealers in Medicines at 25 cents a box.

It is perfectly safe to use in all cases, and pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States. Price 25 cents. EFFECT OF ADVERTISING.—It is amusing at times to observe the stores of the merchants who don't advertise; to see the anxious proprietors looking into the streets and see the people go by, wondering why they don't come in, while the stores of their neighbours who do advertise are thronged with customers. Some people will learn by observation, others will not.—Daily Palladium.

ART OF ADVERTISING.—Horace Greeley, of New York, says:—The most successful business men in this city are those who have advertised liberally and constantly. A small advertisement constantly appearing is better than a display column occasionally.

TO A YOUNG MERCHANT—When you pay more for the rent of your business house than for advertising your business, you are pursuing a false policy. If you can do business, let it be known."—FRANKLIN.
