He spoke at great length of the temperance movement, urging that while not making a religion of temperance, the church was in duty bound to take it up as a part of its economy; and believing that the church would be more powerful if it took temperance in hand.

The Rev. F. W. Kirkpatrick followed in a short address, in which he disclaimed any credit for the steps he had taken in connection with the society in his church. He read an abstract of a constitution of a Church of England temperance society, which was proposed to be organized in connection with the Diocese of Ontario, and which embraced both total abstainers and non-abstainers. He strongly condemned the system of "treating," as tending to promote drunkenness, and hoped that a stand would be taken against it. Mr R. T.
