The New York Times thinks that in refusing to accept a Royal Commission to investigate the Huntington charges, Messrs. Blake and Derion "have themselves been guilty of the offence of hindering the investigation which had been charged upon them." This is an opinion from a good distance, but it is one in which many will coincide and give the writer credit for his perception.

This success on the part of members of our volunteer force proves incentestibly the benefits which have resulted from the encouragement given by the Government to rifle shooting. A knowledge of the rifle and how to use it is an acquisition of the greatest importance to our volunteers. The progress of Canadians in this respect has stirred up the Americans, who heretofore have paid little or no attention to rifle practice, and we now hear of ranges Dr. Stewart has been in constant attendance being established in different parts of the upon him.
