There is something very suggestive in the staff to read the letters in the captured balloons. The study has had a curious result. In former letters I remarked on the extraordinary ignorance which prevailed in and among Germans, of French literature. It is not, of course, any thing profound as the Bostian darkness of the Gallie mind concerning Germans and Germany, but still remarkable on the part of such a wellinstructed people. When we were before Phalsbourg I found no one had ever heard of Erckmanu. Chatrian's novels. The study of sacks full of letters which has been forced on the staff has very much altered their view of the character of their enemies. They are astonish. ed to find that there are French busbands who loved their own wives, and French wives who are devoted to their husbands. They are astonished to discover evidences of noble qualities of heart and head on the part of a people whom they have despised as frivolous, false, and evil, and to meet with intensity of domest affection and family love—a depth of filial and paternal love which Germans highly appreciate. They are struck too by the heroic spirit-a far 9.30 p.m. higher feeling, than the display of desperate 6.00 a.m. and reckless obstinacy, which animates them in resisting an enemy who appears to be irresistible. The result is, I may safely say that the German officers of whom I speak have a

The ice-boating thus far at Poughkepsie, New York, this winter has not been very good, but nevertheless, the owners of boats have entered into the sport with much zeal.
