Mr Greenwood says the Dustman's profits are large in London-necessarily large, because the city is so vast and so populous that immense quantities of material would go to waste, but for the industry of the busy class of refuseof the noble lord, Prussia had alrea- gatherers. The Dustmen are not mere scavengers in London; they are members of an organized society, which has a Lord for its President, rules and regulations for its guidance, a charitable fand for its sick, and a medal by which its agents are distinguished from imposors-and at the last Christmas season the following remarkable circular was served upon the householders of the city :- To the Respected Household :- We, your constant Dustmen, beg to remind you that the season has arrived. when you so kindly gratify us with your boun. At the same time, we take the liberty of cautioning you against the impositions of persons who call themselves dustmen, but are merely scavengers. Whoever calls for this paper, please ask him to show his medal, which has a figure of Britannia on one side, and a Music. portrait of Lord - on the other, and you will deeply oblige your humble servants. Mr Greenwood says of this hint for a Christmas gift, that "it is cheering to discover that the elebrated 'Literary Dustman,' whose fame lives in song, did not in vain demonstrate the advantages attending a polite education and the cultivation of refinement, though in a soil no more promising than ashes. The prized medal is doubtless to be found suspended by a bit of blue ribben round the neck of your 'constant' dustman, bidden by the grimy smock that covers his manly bosom. His poetic bosom, or why 'constant?' Not your 'respectful,' or your 'grateful,' or your 'dutiful' dustman, but your 'constant' dustman."
