They cannot legally fish nearer than three marine miles off shore; but this prohibition they have never observed except in the presence of a superior force. Instances occur of gross outrages perpetrated by American fishermer on their weaker British rivals. At the Bay of Seven Islands the Hudson Bay Company have a trading post. Mr. Henderson, the Agent of the Company, informed Captain Fortin that, in 1852, over 52 American schooners anchored in the bay to fish for mackerel. Finding that their superior numbers gave them the mastery, they pursued a system of insult and injury towards the agent of the company, carrying off his fire-wood and setting fire to the fences which harbor the Alliance fell in with the sloop of Granted.
