TO HIS KINGSTON PATRONS. JANUARY 1, 1855.

PATRONS! here's a HAPPY NEW YEAR! happy hearts and cheering ! For the young and blooming stranger from the far Hesperian Isles. Since we met, the Springtide parted from the Winter's cold embrace, h The forest birds thanked God and heaven for the light of Nature's Since we met, the Summer flowers blossomed on the living Lills, And the vallies laughed for gladness to the piping of the rills.

ince we met, the sheaved Autumn piled on high its golden store, And a blessed crop of bounty graced the thankful Farmer's floor. Since we met, the Victor Banner of Old England was unfurled, And allied with France's Standard for the safety of the world.

Turning back the Russian Despot from his path of blood and crime. Winning crowns of doubtful glory that will perish but with Time. Witness but the manly struggle upon ALMA's heights of blood,

DEATH OF THE OLD YEAR.

OLD YEAR! OLD YEAR! my pulsing heart Is struggling like a wretch in chains, I would fly with thee o'er the plains, Old Year .- Old Year, we must not part. Cold blows the night wind on the wold. The starbeams, too, are falsely cold. The pale moon's boasted love is sold-Old Year, why hast thou grown so old!

Thou broughtest joy, thou broughtest woe, And there are hopes alive and dead, Thou broughtest faults of heart and head. And yearnings purer than the snow. The plains are wide where thou would'st lead Me, barren as a lying creed, I cannot go, my heart would bleed-Old Year, why is thy fate decreed!

Thou hast struck down the bosom friend, That would have soothed our after years. And thou hast brought both smiles and tears, And woes and blessings without end. Down come the snows, the night winds play, Like elves, through all thy locks of gray; Midnight is prone to bar thy way-

Old Year, thou must not leave to-day!

Oh! motley life! Oh! checkered scene! A riddle-world of dreams and doubts, We dare not trust our latest thoughts,

We nothing know but what has been ! Moaneth the skies, like stricken souls, My practised sense can hear the ghouls; Of centuries rushing from the poles-Old Year, what mean these spectral shoals!

And knowing nothing, we would cling Like beggars to thy garment's hem, Loose leaves upon a withered stem, We fear what the next breath may bring. Old Year, thou'rt passing from my side, There is a bark upon the tide O'er which thy ghost prepar'st to ride-Old Year, put on thy ancient pride !

Oh! cold and heartless is the wind, And colder are the heartless stars, White Death within their icy cars, And Darkness clambefing up behind. The cold moon smiles more coldly still. Colder each frozen mount and hill, Bleak rolls the storm, the snow flakes chill-Old Year, why standest thou so still!

Why tremblest thou? Is Death so high! Where are the souls which thou hast made So happy? Are there none to aid? Is there no help in all the sky ! Gather thy garments close, Old Year, There is an end to all thy cheer. A deep voice calls-dost thou not hear! Farewell! for we must part. Old Year!

Gather thy robes about thy limbs, Remember thy ancestral fame, Pass bravely on to whence you came, While shouts the storm its passion-hymns. So! thou hast vanished like a King. Thou hast found Death a living thing. To which brave souls most bravely cling_ See! where he sits a Spirit-King.

There's a face of thrilling beauty smiling on me through the night. And a form of faultless mould standing crowned in the room: My eyes can scarcely view it for its calm, celestial light. And Surprise stands up a tiptoe to gaze upon its bloom. I know it is the New Year, so ravishingly fair,

Like a flower dropped from heaven, from the garden of the skies; My fingers touch its pearl-cheeks, and press its golden hair, feyes. And I drink large draughts of feeling from the fountains of its A welcome to each NEW YEAR, fresh cast in Beauty's mould-A welcome for the NEW YEAR, and a tear drop for the OLD!
