EWIS W. SHANNON:

THE GOVERNMENT AND HOME RULE

As the hour is approaching when the country will be called upon to pronounce between the present government and th opposition, between Sir John and Edward Blake, between conservative rule and grit domination, it may not be out place to call attention of that portion of the electorate most interested in the home rule question, to a few facts. Hon Edward Blake is extelled by numbers to day on secount of his action last spring at Ottawa; numbers cry his praises "from the house tops," and chant preans of anticipated triumph, although they are as greatly mistaken in their pectations of a grit victory as in their estimate of their leader's worth. We would recall to them that it was the Bon. Ed. Blake, minister of justice, who in 1877, condemned John Costigan, then a rank and file member, for having at empted to secure even-handed justice for O'Donoghue, of the North West. It was the same Mr. Blake who proclaimed, in the house, (see Hansard of April, 1877) that he was "surprised to see the member for Victoria pleading or a red-handed rebel. This Mr Blake is the same who then found little enough room in the house as a Canadian, without playing the part of an Irishman. And this honorable gentleman dreams that by a twist of the wrist, a piece of political jugglery he can alienate the Irish vote from Sir John.

(See these papers, the former of the 15th May, 1886, and the latter of the same date, as well as the Dablin Nation of that week These men, the Irish conservative mem bers, lead by Hon. respect, yours very truly, There was as much difference in the effect of the Costigan resolutions of 1882 and those Mr. Blake wished to push through in 1886, with regard to their good effect beyond the Atlantic, as there is between the calm and logical course of Parnell and the thoughtless, headlong plans of Rossa upon the ultimate success of the Irish cause. But where is the best test of real sympathy? Is it in words or deeds? Docidedly in the latter! Go back to 1880; to that time when famine abroad in the land, and from the basalt coast of Antrim to the waves of Trahollow and unwholesome struggles of more, from where the sun rises at morn ing over Ban Heber, to where he sets at

Go back to that winter, when the voice of a suffering people called for help. and the hand of the famishing was extended for assistance. How did that cry affect the conservative party, and how did Sir John and his followers respond to it? On the 20th February, 1880, just about seven years ago, the sum of one hundred thousand dollars, cash, was voted for the purpose, and was sent by the Canadian conservative government to the evicted and suffering people in Ireland. Are we to forget that act ? Will Mr. Blake point to any such movement upon his part-aye to any step ever taken either as leader a party or otherwise to befriend the Irish people in the only substantial way in which they needed help | And yet the home role question is made one of Canadian | no ships.
