JUDGE M'GUIRE.

We need scarcely say that we are gratified at the elevation of Mr. T. H. McGuire, Q. C., to the bench in the North-West territories. Mr. McGuire's abilities are well known both to his colleagues of the profession and to the general public; both his talents and hisgeneral disposition have made him friends and admirers who will regret his departure, though pleased at the cause of it. The occupations of a judge will afford a congenial aphere for the exercise of Judge McGuire's powers and the cultivation of his legal tastes. We expect to hear of him ornamenting the bench and producing some legal work

VALEDICTORIAN REMARKS.

The young men who received their per mission to depart from the university this afternoon and enter the world of affairs had some good advice given in the baccalaureate sermon last Sunday. It might seem that the return annually of such obcasions as these would leave the prescher nothing to say that was not extreme y trite and wearisome, and in fact there is great likeness between all occasions of parting in their general features.

When the view has been enlarged by the ascension of thought to a more elevated platform, when above all divine philosophy has been accepted as our guide and director, the influx of broad senti- maladies as Biliousness, Indigestion, ments drives out the petty, mean, and narrow, universal sympathies supplant selfishness, and the base and sordid parts of our nature are made subordinate. A training in liberal arts, then, expands the mind while subduing the passions; it teaches the inferiority of pursuits and desires bounded by the narrow space of physical existence; it affords those who have its advantage a contentment independent of fortune; it, therefore, prepares the way for morals and religion. At the present day the call of duty is heard be inexpedient to apply to the imperial with deafened ears, and the multitude in their clamor for wealth and for their alleged rights forget what they owe to mail enterprise, the object of which is to others.
