JESS. HI RIDER HAGGARD

She was quite right; there was absolutely nothing else that they could do; so John set to work and hobbled the horses, tying them together for further security, for it would be a dreadful thing if they were to stray. By the time that this was done the twilight was gathering into night, and the two sat down to contemplate their surroundings with feelings akin to deepair. So far as the eye could reach there was nothing to be seen but a vast stretch of dreary plain, across which the night wind blew in dreary gusts, making the green grass ripple like the sea. There was absolutely no shelter to be had, nor anything to break the monotony, unless it were a couple of ant heaps about five paces apart. John sat down on one of the ant heaps and Jels took up her position on the other, and there they remained, like pelicans in the wilderness, watching the daylight fade out of

"Don't you think that we had better aft together " suggested John, feebly. "It would be warmer, you see." "No, I don't," answered Jess, snappishly

"I am very comfortable as I am." Unfortunately, however, this was not the exact truth, for poor Jess' teeth were already chattering with cold. Soon, indeed, they found that the only way to keep their blood moving was, weary as they were, to continually tramp up and down. After an hour and a half or so of this, the breeze dropped and the temperature got more suitable to their lightly clad, half starved and almost exhausted bodies. Then the moon came up, and the hyenas, or wolves, or some such animals, came up also and howled round themthough they could not see them. These byenas proved more than Jess' nerves could stand, and she at last condescended to ask John to share her ant heap; there they sat shivering in each other's arms, throughout the livelong night.

There they sat, or rather lapsed into a rough, short trot, which was ball association if the opportunity offers. cowered, for hour after hour without sleep- agony to her, riding as she was, and from ing, for sleep was impossible, and almost that into a walk. Indeed, just before sunset, without speaking; and yet, notwithstanding the misery of their circumstances, not altogether unhappy, since they were united in their misery. At last the eastern sky began to turn gray, and John rose and shook the dew from his hat and clothes, and limped off as well as his half frozen limbs would allow, to catch the horses, which were standing together some yards away, looking huge and ghostlike in the mist. By sunrise he had managed to saddle them up, and they started once more. This time, however, he had to ift Jess on to the saddle. About 8 o'clock they halted and ate their little remaining food, and then proceeded slowly enough, for the korses were almost as tired as they were, and it was necessary to ausband them if they were to reach Mooifontein by dark. At midday they halted for an hour and a half, and then, feeling almost worn out, went on once more, reckoning that they could not be more than sixteen or seventeen niles from Monifontein. It was about two hours after this that a catastrophe happened. The course they were following ran down the side of one land wave, then across a little swampy sluit, and up on the opposite slope. They crossed the swampy ground, walked their horses up to the crest of the opposite rise, and found themselves face to face with a party of armed and mounted

> CHAPTER XXXI JESS FINDS A FRIEND.

The Boers swooped down on them with s shout, like a hawk on a sparrow. John pulled up his horse and drew his revolver. "Don't, don't!" cried Jess; "our only chance is to be civil;" whereon, thinking better of the matter, he replaced it, and wished the leading Boer good day. "What are you doing here!" asked Dutchman; whereon Jess explained that they had a pass-which John promptly producedand were proceeding to Mooifontein. "Ah. Om Crofts?" said the Boer as he took the pass; "you are likely to meet a burying party there," and at the time Jess did not understand what he meant. He eved the pass suspiciously all over, and then asked how it came to be stained with water.

Jess, not daring to tell the truth, said that t had been dropped into a puddle. The Boer was about to return it, when suddenly his eye feil upon Jess' saddle. "How is it that the girl is riding on a man's saddle?" he asked. "Why, I know that sad-

I must arrest you." Jess began to make further excuses, but he merely repeated, "I must arrest you," and gave some orders to the men with him "We are in for it again," she said to John "and there is nothing for it but to go." "I shan't mind so much if only they will give us some grub," said John, philosophically. "I am half starved."

"And I am half dead," said Jess, with little laugh. "I wish they would shoot us and have done with it. "Come, cheer up, Jess," he answered: "periaps the luck is going to change." She shook her head with the air of one who expects the worst, and then some gay young spirits among the Boers came up and made things pleasant by an exhibition of their polished wit, which they chiefly exercised at the expense of poor Jess, whose appearance was, as may well be imagined, exceedingly wretched and forlorn; so much so that I would have moved the pity of most people. But these specimens of the golden youth of a simple pastoral folk found in it a rich mine of opportunities. They asked her if she would not like to ride straddle legged, and if she had bought her dress from an old Hotten-tot who had done with it, and if she had been rolling about tipsy in the veldt to get all the mud on it; and generally availed themselves of this unparalleled occasion to be witty at tress. Indeed, one gay young dog, called Ja-cobus, was proceeding from jokes linguistic to jokes practical. Perceiving that man's saddle by the exercise of a curious faculty of balance, it occurred to him that it would be a fine thing to upset it and make her fall upon her face. Accordingly, with a sudden twist of the rein he brought his horse sharply against her wearied animal, nearly throwing it down; but she was too-quick for him, and saved herself by catching at the mane. Jess said nothing; indeed, she made no answer to her tormentors, and fortunately John understood very little of what they were saying. Presently, however, the young Boer made another attempt, putting out his hand to give her a sly push; and, as it happened, John saw it, and the sight of the indignity made the blood boil in his veins. Before he could reflect on what he was doing he was alongside of the man, and, catching him by the throat, had buried him backward over his crupper with all the force he could command. The man fell heavily upon his shoulders, and instantly there was a great hubbub. John drew his revolver, and the other Boers raised their rifles, and Jess bottom, had disapproved of them. "Leave them alone and put down those he was trying to push the girl from the horse. Almighty! it is not wonderful those English call us brute beasts when you boys do such a buck with a bullet through it." Accordingly the row passed over, and playful Jacobus-whom Jess noted with satisfaction was exceedingly sick and trembling in every limb-was with difficulty hoisted on to his horse, and proceeded on his journey with not a single bit of fun left in him. A little while after this Jess pointed out

"We are not there yet," remarked John, Another weary half hour passed, and then they suddenly, on passing over a crest, saw Hans Coetzee's homestead lying down by the water in the hollow. So that was where they were being taken to.

Within a hundred yards of the house Boers halted and consulted, except Jacobus, who went on, still looking very green. Finally the elder man came to them and addressed Jess, at the same time handing her back the "You can go on home," he said. "The Englishman must stay with us till we find out | condition.

"He says that I can go. What shall I do?" asked Jess. "I don't like leaving you with "Dot why go, of course. I can look after

"Good by, Jess," said John. "God bless you. "Good by, John," she answered, looking him steadily in the eyes for a moment, and | Turkey. then turning away to hide the tears which would gather in her own. And thus they parted.

She knew her way now, even across the open veidt, for she dared not go by the road. There was, however, a bridle path that ran over the hill at the back of the house, and for this she shaped her course. It was 5 o'clock now, and both she and her horse were in condition of great exhaustion, which was en hanced in her case by want of food and trouble of mind. But she was a strong woman and had a will of from and she held on where most women would have died. Jess meant to get to Mooifontein somehow, and she knew that she would get there. If she could only reach the place and get some help sent to her lover, she did not greatly care what happened to her afterward. The pace of the horse-side was riding got slower and slower. From the ambling canter into which at first she managed occasionally to Another drawback to their romantic situa- force it, and which is the best pace to or a little after 6, o'clock, the walk became final. At last they reached the rising ground that stretched up the slope to the Mooifontein hill, and here the poor beast fell down, utterly worn out. Jess slipped off and tried to. drag it up, but failed. It had not a yard of go left in it. So she did what she could, pulling off the bridle and undoing the girth, so that the saddle would fall off if the horse ever managed to rise. Then she set to work to walk over the hill. The poor horse watched her go with melancholy eyes, knowing that it was being deserted. First it neighed, then. with a desperate effort, struggled to its feet and ran after her a hundred yards or so, only saw it, and, exhausted as she was, she positively ran to get away from the look in those score.

When she was about half way down a shower of sparks sud denly shot up into the air from the spot where the house should be, caused by the fall of a piece of wall into the smouldering embers beneath. Again Jess paused, wondering and aghast. What could have happened! Determined at all hazards to discover, she crept on very cautiously. Before she had gone another twenty yards, however, a hand was | S. Barnes purchased him as a yearling suddenly laid upon her arm. She turned from Milton Young, who owns the sire quickly, too paralyzed with fear to cry out, and as she did so a voice that was familiar to her whispered, "Missie Jess, Missie Jess, is it you!" into her ear. "I am Jantje."

She gave a sigh of relief, and her heart which had stood still, began to move again Here was a friend at last. "I heard you coming down the hill, though ou came so softly," he said; "but I could not tell who it was, because you jumped from rock to rock, and did not walk as usual. But thought it was a woman with boots; I could not see, because the light all falls dead against the hill, and the stars are not up. So I got to the left of your path-for the wind is blowing from the right-and waited till you had passed, and winded you. Then I knew

TRUTH .

BAIR MAGIC! las proved itself the most invaluable Remedy eyer offered to the people in Canada for Baldness where the lightest chance of roots are visible. It is unfalling in producing a strong crop of hair—hair that is falling out will be checked at once. Dandruff is cured forever in a remarkable short time. Grey Hair is seen remarkable short time. Grey Hair is gra-qually brought back to its natural color. The Hair Magic is no dye—it contains no grease, nor anything but what is nursing to the hair and scalp. Years of steady labor have placed this wonderful Magic at the head of everything yet produced before the people. The sale of the Magic in Kingston alone has increased 200 per cent, within all months. Hundreds of people have already been benefitted. Don't wait until the roots are all gone, but procure a bottle at once. For sale by all druggists. Ask for Dr. Dorenwend s' Hair Magic." J. G.
