The bit of candle they had been using, however, was nearly burned out, so from the rubbish is the corner he produced a box full of "ends," some of them three or four inches long. Jess, in that queer sort of way in which trifles do strike us when the mind is undergoing a severe strain, instantly remembered that for years she had been unable to discover what became of the odd pieces of the candles used in the house. Now the mystery was explained.

How, then, was it to be prevented? She thought again of going down and confronting Frank Muller, and openly accusing him of her tite idea. Who would believe her? and if they did believe, what good would is do? She would only be impresented and kept out of harm's way, or possibly murdered without further ado. Then she thought of attenuation to communicate with her uncle and Bessie, to tell them that John was, so far as she knew, alive, only to recognize the impossibility of doing so now that the sentry was back. Besides, what object could be served? The knowledge that John was alive might, it is true, nerve up Bessie to resist Muller, but then the sole result would be that the old man would be shot. "HAIR MAGIC!" lias proved itself the most invaluable Remedy ever offered to the people in Canada for Baldness where the lightest chance of roots are visible. It is unfalling in producing a strong crop of hair—hair that is falling out will be becked at once. Dandruff is cured forever in a remarkable short time. Grey Hair is gradually brought back to its natural color. The Hair Magic is no dye-it contains no grease, nor anything but what is nursing to the hair and scalp. Years of steady labor have placed his wonderful Magic at the head of everything yet produced before the people. The sale of the Magic in Kingston alone has increased 200 per cent, within six months. Hundreds of people have already been benefitted. Don't wait antil the roots are all gone, but procure a bottle at once. For sale by all druggists. Ask for Dr. Dorenwend s' Hair Magic. J. G.
