CHAPTER XXXV THE CONCLUSION OF THE MATTER When the rain ceased and the moon beganto shine, Jess was still fleeing like a wild thing across the plain on the top of the mountain. . She felt no sense of exhaustion now or even of weariness; her only idea was to get away, right away somewhere, where she could lose herself and nobody would ever see her again. Presently she came to the top of Leuw Kloof, and in a bewildered way recognized the spot and commenced to descend it. Here was a place where she might lie until she died, for no one ever came there, except now and again some wandering Kaffir berd. On, she sprang, from rock to rock, a wild, weird figure, well in keeping with the solemnand titanic sadness of the place. Twice she fell, once right into the stream, but she took no heed, she did not even seem to feel it. At last she was at the bottom, now creeping like a black dot across the wide spaces of moonlight and now swallowed up in the shadow. There before her was the mouth of her little cave her strength was leaving her at last, and she was fain to creep into it, broken hearted, "Oh, God, forgive me! God forgive me!"

she moaned, as she sank upon the rocky floor. "Bessie, I sinned against you, but I have washed away my sin. I did it for you, Bessie, love, not for myself. I had rather have died than kill him for myself. You will marry John now, and you will never, never know what I did for you. I am going to die. I know that. I am dying, Oh, if I only could see his face once more before I die-be-

Blowly the westering moonlight crept down the blackness of the rock. Now at last it peeped into the little cave and played upon John's sleeping face lying within two feet of street. Telephone No. 196. Office hours from | ber. Her prayer had been granted; there was her lover by her side.

Then she lehned over him and watched his sleeping face, a very incarnation of infinite, despairing tenderness and love that is deeper than the grave. And as she watched gradually her feet and legs grew cold and numb, till at length she could feel nothing below her bosom. She was dead nearly to the heart. The rays of the moon faded slowly from the level of the little cave, and John's face grew dark to her darkening sight. She bent down and kissed him once, twice, thrice. Then at last the end came. There was a great flashing of light before her eyes, and the roaring as of a thousand seas within her ears, and her head sank gently on her lover's breast as on a pillow; and there she died and passed upward toward the wider life and larger liberty, or perchance downward into the depths of an eternal sleep.

Poor dark eyed, deep hearted Jess! This was the fruition of her love and this her It was done. She had gone, taking with her the secret of her self sacrifice and crime, and the night winds moaning amid the rocks

There was a strange and dreadful irony in the situation, and one which sometimes finds a counterpart in our waking life, but still the man slept and the dead woman lay till the night turned into the morning and the world woke up as usual. The sunbeams slid into the cave and played ndifferently upon the ashen face and tangled curls and on the broad chest of the living man whereon they rested. An old baboon peeped round the rocky edge and manifested no surprise, only indignation, at the intrusion of humanity, dead or alive, into his dominions. Yes, the world woke up as usual, and recked not and troubled not because Jess was

It was so accustomed to such sights. And at last John woke up, too. stretched his arms and yawned, and then for the first time became aware of the weight upon his breast. He glanced down and saw limly at first-then more clearly. There are some things into which it is wisest not to pry, and one of them is the first agony of a strong man's grief. Happy was it for him that his brain did not give way in that first lonely hour of bottomless despair. But he lived through it, as we do live through such things, and was sane and sound after it, though it left its mark npon his life. Two hours later a gaunt, haggard figure came stumbling down the hillside toward the | medical hall. site of Mooifontein, bearing something in his arms. The whole place was in commotion. Here and there were knots of Boers talking excitedly, who, when they saw the man coming hurried up to see who it was and what he carried. But when they knew they fell back awed and without a word, and he, too, passed through them without a word. For a moment he hesitated, realizing that the house was burned, down, and then turned into the wagon shed and laid his burden down upon the saw bench on which Frank Muller had sat as judge upon the previous day. Then at last he spoke in a hoarse voice, "Where is the old man?" One of them pointed to the door of the little room. "Open it!" he said, so flercely that they again fell back and obeyed him without a "John! John!" cried Silas Croft, "Thank God you have come back to us from the dead!" and, trembling with joy and surprise, he would have fallen upon his neck. "Hush!" he answered; "I have brought the

And he led him to where she lay. During the day the Boers all went and left them alone. Now that Frank Muller was dead there was no thought among them of carrying out the sentence upon their old neighbor. Besides, there was no warrant for the execution, even had they desired so to do, for their commandant had died leaving it unsigned. So they held a sort of informal inquest upon their leader's body, and then buried him in the little graveyard that was planted with the four red gums, one at each corner, and walled in on the hillside at the back of where the house had stood. Rather than be at the pains of hollowing out another they buried him in the very grave that he had caused to be dug to receive the body of Who had murdered Frank Muller was and remains a mystery among them to this day. The knife was identified by the natives about the farm as belonging to the Hottentot Jantje, and a Hottentot was seen running from the place of the deed and hunted for some way, but could not be caught or heard of again. Therefore many of them are of the opinion that he is the guilty man. Others, again, believes that the crime rests upon the LEAVHYOUR ORDERS shoulders of the villainous one eyed Kaffir, Hendrik, his own servant, who had also mysterously vanished. But as they have never found either of them, and are not likely to, found either of them, and are not likely to.

"John," said the old man, when they had filled in the grave, "this is no country for Englishmen. Let us go home to England." John bowed his head in assent. Standard bank at Newcasite, in Natal. And so in due course they went. And now what more is there to tell! Jess to those who read what has been written as it is meant to be read, was the soul of it all, and Jess is dead. It is useless to set a lifeless thing upon its feet, rather let us strive to follow the sonrings of the spirit. Jess is dead and her story at an end.

Bickles Anti Consumption Syrup is a combination of several medicinal herbs which exert a most wonderful influence in curing pulmonary consumption and all other diseases of the lungs, chest and throat. It promotes a free and easy expectoration, and gives ease even to the greatest sufferer. Coughs, colds, shortness of breath, and affections of the chest, attended with weakness of the digestive organs, or with general debility, seem to vanish under its use. No other remedy acts so readily in allaying inflammation or breaking up a severe cold, even the most obstinate cough is overcome by its penetrating and healing properties. When children are affected with colds, coughs, nfiammation of the lungs, croup, quinsey, and sore throat, this Syrup is of vast importance. The number of deaths among children from these diseases is truly alasmng. It is so palatable that a child will not refuse it, and is put at such a price that will not exclude the poor from its

To those who like GOOD CUP OF TEA,

CHINESE MIXTURE.

Drink it alone, it is pure, and therefore cheap. It is much stronger than any other tea, and the same quantity must not be used-two teaspoonfuls will go as far as three of other sorts, therefore it is much more economical. -JAMES REDDEN-China T House.

The state of the s BAIR MAGIO!" Has proved itself the most invaluable Remedy ever offered to the people in Canada for Haldness where the lightest chance of roots are visible. It is unfalling in producing a strong crop of hair—hair that is falling out will be heckediat once. Dandruff is cured forever in a remarkable short time. Grey Hair is gradually brought back to its natural color. The Hair Magic is no dye-it contains no grease, nor anything but what is nursing to the hair and scalp. Years of steady labor have placed this wonderful Magic at the head of everything yet produced before the people. The sale of he Magic in Kingston alone has increased 200 per cent, within six months. Hundreds of people have already been benefitted. Don't wait until the roots are all gone, but procure a bottle at once. For sale by all druggists. Ask for Dr. Dorenwend s ' Hair Magic." & Co., and A.
