follow his life in her thoughts. One day when Florence came to see her she read her MONEY TO LEND at lowest rate, Robert Shaw, corner of King and Brock streets, part of Ernest's letter, and when she had finished was astonished to see a tear in her visitor's keen eyes. She liked Florence the better for that tear. Could she have seen the conflict that was raging in the flerce heart of the woman before her she would have started from her as though she had been a poisonous snake. The letter touched Florence-touched her to the quick. The tale of Ernest's loneliness almost overcame her resolution, for she
