THE WITCH'S HEAD.

By H. RIDER HAGGARD.

"es," answered Ernest, "what of it?"

"What of it? Ah, the stupidity of youth! Go down, go down on your knees, young man, and render thanks to the Power that inspired Lord Carnarvon with the idea of annexing the Transvaal. Can't you very well see that it takes your neck out of the halter? Off with you, and register your name and offense with the secretary to government, and you will be clear forever for any consequences that might ensue from the slight indiscretion of shooting your own first cousin."

"By Jove, Alston! you don't mean that?"

"Mean it? of course I do. The proclamation does not specify any particular offense to which pardon is to be denied, and you have lived more than six months on the Transvaal territory. Off you go."

And Ernest went like an arrow.

Ernest reached the government office and registered his name, and in due course received "her majesty's gracious pardon and indemnity from and against all actions, proceedings and prosecutions at law, having arisen, arising or to arise, by whomsoever undertaken, etc., etc., conveyed through his excellency the administrator of our said territory of the Transvaal."

CHAPTER XXVI.

FOUND WANTING.

One morning—it was a particularly lovely morning—Ernest was standing after breakfast smoking. Jeremy was lounging on an easy chair on the veranda, in company with the boy Roger Alston, and intensely interested in watching a furious battle between two lines of ants, black and red, who had their homes somewhere in the stonework. For a long while the issue of the battle remained doubtful, victory inclining, if anything, to the side of the thin red line, when suddenly from the entrance to the nest of the black ants there emerged a battalion of giants, great fellows, at least six times the size of the others, who fell upon the red ants and routed them, taking many prisoners. Then followed the most curious spectacle, namely, the deliberate execution of the captive red ants, by having their heads bitten off by the great black soldiers. Jeremy and Roger knew what was coming very well, for these battles were of frequent occurrence, and the casualties among the red ants simply frightful. On this occasion they determined to save the prisoners, which was effected by dipping a match in some of the nicotine at the bottom of a pipe and placing it in front of the black giants. The ferocious insects would thereupon abandon their captives, and rushing at the strange intruder hang on like bulldogs till the poison did its work, and they dropped off senseless, to recover presently and stagger off home, holding their legs to their antennæ and exhibiting every other symptom of frightful headache.

Jeremy was sitting on a chair oiling the matches, and Roger, kneeling on the pavement, was employed in beguiling the giants into biting them, when suddenly they heard the sound of galloping horses and the rattle of wheels. The lad, lowering his head still more, looked out toward the market square through a gap between the willow stems.

"Hurrah, Mr. Jones!" he said, "here comes the mail."

Next minute, amid loud blasts from the bugle, and enveloped in a cloud of dust, the heavy cart, to the sides and seats of which the begrimmed, worn out passengers were clinging like drowning men to straws, came rattling along as fast as the six grays reserved for the last stage could gallop, and vanished toward the postoffice.

"There's the mail, Ernest," hallooed Jeremy; "she will bring the English letters."

Ernest nodded, turned a little pale, and nervously knocked out his pipe. No wonder; that mail cart carried his destiny, and he knew it. Presently he walked across the square to the postoffice. The letters were not sorted, and he was the first person there.

At last the little shutter of the postoffice was thrown up, and Ernest got his own letters, together with those of Mr. Alston and Jeremy. He turned into the shade of a neighboring veranda and rapidly sorted the pile. There was no letter in Eva's handwriting. But there was one in that of her sister Florence. Ernest knew the writing well; there was no mistaking its peculiar, upright, powerful looking characters. This he opened hurriedly. Inclosed in the letter was a note, which was in the writing he had expected to see. He rapidly unfolded it, and as he did so a flash of fear passed through his brain.

"Why did she write in this way?"

The note could not have been a long one, for in another minute it was lying on the ground, and Ernest, pale faced, and with catching breath, was clinging to the veranda post with both hands to save himself from falling. In a few seconds he recovered, and picking up the note, walked quickly across the square toward his house.

A few seconds later Mr. Alston and Jeremy, from their point of vantage on the veranda, saw Ernest coming with swift strides up the garden path. His face was drawn with pain, and there was a fleck of blood upon his lip. He passed them without a word, and, entering the house, slammed the door of his own room. Mr. Alston and Jeremy looked at one another.

"What's up?" said the laconic Jeremy.

Mr. Alston thought a while before he answered, as was his fashion.

"Something gone wrong with 'the ideal,' I should say," he said at length; "that is the way of ideals."

"Shall we go and see?" said Jeremy, uneasily.

"No, give him a minute or two to pull himself together. Lots of time for consolation afterward."

Meanwhile Ernest, having got into his room, sat down upon the bed and again read the note which was inclosed in Florence's letter. Then he folded it up and put it down, slowly and methodically. Next he opened the other letter, which he had not yet looked at, and read that too. After he had done it he threw himself face downward on the pillow. At that moment he heard footsteps approaching. Mr. Alston and Jeremy entered.

"Any letters, Ernest?" asked the former.

"Letters! Oh, yes, I beg your pardon, here they are," and he took a packet from the pocket of his white coat and handed them to him.

Mr. Alston took them, looking all the while fixedly at Ernest, who avoided his glance.

"What is the matter, my boy?" he said, kindly, at last; "nothing wrong, I hope?"

Ernest looked at him blankly.

"What is it, old chap?" said Jeremy, seating himself on the bed beside him, and laying his hand on his arm.

Then Ernest broke out into a paroxysm of grief painful to behold. Fortunately for all concerned, it was brief. Had it lasted much longer, something must have given way. Suddenly his mood changed and he grew hard and bitter.

"Nothing, my dear fellows, nothing," he said: "that is, only the sequel to a pretty little idyl. You may remember a letter I wrote—to a woman—some months back. There, you both of you know the story. Now you shall hear the answer, or, to be more correct, the answers.

"That—woman has a sister. Both she and her sister have written to me. My—her sister's letter is the longest. We will take it first. I think we may skip the first page, there is nothing particular in it, and I do not wish to—waste your time. Now listen:

"'By the way, I have a piece of news for you which will interest you, and which you will, I am sure, be glad to hear; for, of course, you will have by this time got over any little tenderness you may have had in that direction. Eva' (that is the woman to whom I wrote, and to whom I thought I was engaged) 'is going to be married to a Mr. Plowden, a gentleman who has been acting as locum tenens for Mr. Halford.'" Here Jeremy sprung up and swore a great oath. Ernest motioned him down and went on: "'I say I am certain that you will be glad to hear this, because the match is in every respect a satisfactory one, and will, I am sure, bring dear Eva happiness. Mr. Plowden is well off, and, of course, a clergyman, two great guarantees for the success of their matrimonial venture. Eva tells me that she had a letter from your last mail' (the letter I read you, gentlemen), 'and asks me to thank you for it. If she can find time she will send you a line shortly; but, as you will understand, she has her hands very full just at present. The wedding is to take place at Easterwick church on the 17th of May' (that is to-morrow, gentlemen), 'and, if this letter reaches you in time, I am sure that you will think of us all on that day. It will be very quiet, owing to our dear aunt's death being still so comparatively recent. Indeed, the engagement has, in obedience to Mr. Plowden's wishes, for he is very retiring, been kept quite secret, and you are absolutely the first person to whom it has been announced. I hope that you will feel duly flattered, sir. We are very busy about the trousseau, and just now the burning question is, of what color the dress in which Eva is to go away in after the wedding shall be. Eva and I are all for gray. Mr. Plowden is for olive green, and, as is natural under the circumstances, I expect that he will carry the day. They are together in the drawing room settling it now. You always admired Eva (rather warmly once), do you remember how cut up you both were when you went away? Alas for the fickleness of human nature; you should see her now. Her happiness makes her look lovely; but I hear her calling me. No doubt they have settled this momentous question. Good by. I am not clever at writing, but I hope that my news will make up for my want of skill. Always yours,'

"'FLORENCE CRSWICK.'

"Now for the inclosure," said Ernest:

"'DEAR ERNEST—I got your letter. Florence will tell you what there is to tell. I am going to be married. Think what you will of me; I cannot help myself. Believe me, this has cost me great suffering, but my duty seems clear. I hope that you will forget me, Ernest, as henceforth it will be my duty to forget you. Good by, my dear Ernest, oh, good by. E.'"

"Humph!" murmured Mr. Alston beneath his breath, "as I thought, clay, and damned bad clay, too!"

Slowly Ernest tore the letter into small fragments, threw them down, and stamped upon them with his foot as though they were a living thing.

"I wish I had shaken the life out of that devil of a parson!" groaned Jeremy, who was in his way as much affected by the news as his friend.

"Curse you!" said Ernest, turning on him fiercely, "why didn't you stop where you were and look after her, instead of coming humbugging after me?"

Jeremy only groaned by way of answer. Mr. Alston, as was his way when perplexed, filled his pipe and lit it. Ernest paced swiftly up and down the little room, the white walls of which he had decorated with pictures cut from illustrated papers, Christmas cards and photographs. Over the head of the bed was a photograph of Eva herself, which he had framed in some beautiful native wood. He reached it down.

"Look," he said, "that is the lady herself. Handsome, isn't she, and pleasant to look on? Who would have thought that she was such a devil? Tells me to forget her, and talks about 'her duty!' Women love a little joke!"

He hurled the photograph on to the floor, and trented it as he had treated the letter, grinding it to pieces with his heel.

"They say," he went on, "that a man's curses are sometimes heard wherever it is they arrange these pleasant surprises for us. Now, you fellows, bear witness to what I say, and watch that woman's life. I curse her before God and man! May she lay down her head in sorrow night by night, and year by year! May her"—

"Stop, Ernest," said Mr. Alston, with a shrug, "you may be taken at your word, and you wouldn't like that, you know. Besides, it is cowardly to go on cursing at a woman."

He paused, standing for a moment with his clinched fist still raised above his head, his pale lips quivering with intense excitement, and his dark eyes flashing and blazing like stars.

"You are right," he said, dropping his fist on to the table. "It is with the man that I have to deal."

"What man?"

"This Plowden. I fear that I shall disturb his honeymoon."

"What do you mean?"

"I mean that I am going to kill him, or he is going to kill me, it does not much matter which."

"Why, what quarrel have you with the man? Of course he looked after himself. You could not expect him to consider your interests, could you?"

"If he had cut me out fairly, I should not have a word to say. Every man for himself in this pleasant world. But, mark my words, this parson and Florence have forced her into this unholy business, and I will have his life in payment. If you don't believe me, ask Jeremy. He saw something of the game before he left."

"Look here, Kershaw, the man is a pastor. He will take shelter behind his cloth, he won't fight. What shall you do then?"

"I shall shoot him," was the cool reply.

"Ernest, you are mad; it won't do; you shall not go, and that is all about it. You shall not ruin yourself over this woman, who is not fit to black an honest man's shoes."

"Shall not! shall not! Alston, you use strong language. Who will prevent me?"

"I will prevent you. I am your superior officer, and the corps you belong to is not disbanded. If you try to leave this place you shall be arrested as a deserter. Now don't be a fool, lad; you have killed one man, and got out of the mess. If you kill another, you will not get out of it. Besides, what will the satisfaction be? If you want revenge, be patient. It will come. I have seen something of life; at least, I am old enough to be your father, and I know that you think me a cynic because I laugh at your 'highfalutin' about women. How justly I warned you, you see now. But, cynic or no, I believe in the God above, and I believe, too, that there is a rough justice in this world. It is in the world principally that people expiate the sins of the world, and if this marriage is such a wicked thing, as you think, it will bring its own trouble with it, without any help from you. Time will avenge you. Everything comes to him who can wait."

Ernest's eyes glittered coldly as he answered:

"I cannot wait. I am a ruined man already, all my life is laid waste. I wish to die, but I wish to kill him before I die."

"So sure as my name is Alston you shall not go!"

"So sure as my name is Kershaw I will go!"

For a moment the two men faced one another; it would have been hard to say which looked the most determined. Then Mr. Alston turned and left the room and the house. On the veranda he paused and thought for a moment.

"The boy means business," he thought to himself. "He will try and bolt. How can I stop him? Ah, I have it," and he set off briskly toward the Government house, saying aloud as he went, "I love that lad too well to let him destroy himself over a jilt."

N. McRae, Wyebridge, writes: "I have sold large quantities of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil; it is used for colds, sore throat, croup, etc., and in fact for any affection of the throat it works like magic. It is a cure for burns, wounds, and bruises."

A five mile bicycle race took place on Saturday at Alexandra park, London. Lees won by five yards. Woodside was fourth, fifty yards behind.

Safe, certain, prompt, economic. These few adjectives apply with peculiar force to Dr Thomas' Eclectric Oil—a standard external and internal remedy, adapted to the relief and cure of coughs, sore throat, hoarseness and all affections of the breathing organs, kidney troubles, excoriations, sores, lameness and physical pain.

The American Derby, ran at Chicago on Saturday, was won by a field horse, D. J. McCarthy's chestnut colt C. H. Todd, by Joe Hooker, dam Rosa B. Time, 2 mins. 30½ secs. The Derby was worth $14,000.

When the Vital Current is vitiated from any cause, scorbutic blemishes in the shape of pimples, sores and blotches soon begin to disfigure the skin. In such a case the most effective purifier is Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery and Dyspeptic Cure, which expels impurities from the blood as well as regulates digestion, the bowels, liver and kidneys. For Female Complaints it has no equal.

Mike Kelly is suffering from "Charley Horse" in both legs and has to take a rest. He received a tremendous reception at Chicago on Friday and then made two costly errors and lost the game for Boston. Boston's team is said to be demoralized and discouraged.

H. A. McLaughlin, Norland, writes: "I am sold out of Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery and Dyspeptic Cure. It sells well, and I find in every instance it has proven satisfactory. I have reason to believe it the best preparation of the kind in the market." It cures Dyspepsia, Biliousness, and Torpidity of the Liver, Constipation, and all diseases arising from Impure Blood, Female Complaints, etc.

To those who like

A GOOD CUP OF TEA,

Ask for and drink only

REDDEN'S

CHINESE MIXTURE.

Drink it alone, it is pure, and therefore cheap. It is much stronger than any other tea, and the same quantity must not be used—two teaspoonfuls will go as far as three of other sorts, therefore it is much more economical.
