THE EVIDENCE OF LUMLEY HIGH, DEFECTIVE OFFICER—THE SIEVE OF JUDGEMENT.

Upon the reassembling of the court, the first witness was called Lumley Rich.

The Attorney General—You belong to the defective force?

Witness—I do.

The Attorney General—On the 26th of March were you called to the prisoner's house?

Witness—Yes.

The Attorney General—You have said to me that you did not see the prisoner and his companion leave the room?

Witness—No.

The Attorney General—Did you not see me put on the overcoat?

Witness—Yes.

The Attorney General—You removed your overcoat. It was wet with rain; and it surprised me that madam did not remove hers, which was also wet with rain.

The Attorney General—Were you aware that they had a carriage waiting for them?

Witness—Only I heard so. I did not see it.

The witness was then briefly cross-examined by the prosecution?

Witness—You say that you saw me enter the restaurant from the street, and that I asked you if I could have a private room?

Witness—That is so.

The witness then showed me into a private room?

Witness—Yes.

The witness—Where other persons could not enter?

Witness—Oh, no; it was a room for six or eight persons.

Prisoner—During the time I was there did you attend to other persons besides me?

Witness—Yes.

Prisoner—The room was not strictly private?

Witness—As private as I have said.

Prisoner—What was the first thing I did when I went to the table you pointed out to me?

Witness—You hung it up behind you.

Prisoner—On a peg in the wall?

Witness—Yes.

Prisoner—Did I put the overcoat before I left the room?

Witness—Yes.

Mr. Justice Fenmore—You have said to your Honor that you did not see the prisoner and his companion leave the room?

Witness—Yes.

The Attorney General—You have said to your Honor that you did not see the prisoner and his companion leave the room?

Witness—Yes.

The Attorney General—At what hour of the morning?

Witness—At 7 o'clock.

The Attorney General—Was the prisoner in the house at the time?

Witness—He was not.

The Attorney General—Whom did he move to good society?

Witness—My mistress' father, Mr. Beach.

The Attorney General—Upon what business?

Witness—Upon betting business, my mistress' father.

The Attorney General—What was Mr. Beach's occupation?

Witness—One leg was shorter than the other.

The Attorney General—Had she known the prisoner for any length of time before the engagement?

Witness—For a few weeks only, I believe.

The Attorney General—in what way did he make her acquaintance?

Witness—He came to the house.

The Attorney General—in a friendly way?

Witness—He came first upon business.

The Attorney General—to see whom?

Witness—My mistress' father, Mr. Beach.

The Attorney General—Upon what business?

Witness—He was a bookmaker.

The Attorney General—a betting man?

Witness—Yes. He used to make large bets.

The Attorney General—On racing?

Witness—Yes.

The Attorney General—Was he an educated man?

Witness—No.

The Attorney General—Would you call him a vulgar man?

Witness—Yes.

The Attorney General—Did he move to good society?

Witness—He did not.

The Attorney General—But he was rich.

Witness—Very rich. He drank a great deal of champagne.

The Attorney General—You say that the prisoner first came to the house upon business. Do you know upon what particular business?

Witness—It was something about horses, and he was made up there.

The Attorney General—What made him up there?

Witness—I asked him at what time on the previous night the prisoner returned home. He said at about 10:30, and that the prisoner entered his house accompanied by a lady, opening the street door with his key. I asked him if he had seen the prisoner since, and he replied that he had not. I asked him from what part of the day the prisoner took the latch key, and he replied from the pocket of the claret he wore.

Witness—Yes.

The Attorney General—How much of the champagne was drunk?

Witness—Half a glass—not more.

The Attorney General—Did the lady drink all of it?

Witness—Not any.

The Attorney General—Did the prisoner make any remark as to the amount of the bill?

Witness—Oh, no; he gave me a sovereign and a half sovereign, and said, "That will do."

The Attorney General—Did he order anything else?

Witness—No. When I asked him he said, "I'll bring it."

The Attorney General—What did he say when the bill was brought?

Witness—One pound four shillings.
