Lord Statues made no answer, but Mr. Turner rose and approached, wiping the tears away from his foolish old eyes with a large silk pocket handkerchief. "We shall go to you; but you will not come back to us, Sunning," he began. I don't care to quote the rest of his remarks. He was a cleric of the old fashioned school, who had not, I should imagine, occupied himself much with the subject of exchatology. It was, perhaps, right that he should give utterance to his views, which, I am sure, were at any rate winged angels and golden harps, enunciated with a certain pomposity, despite the to Mildred, that's all. occasional quavering of the speaker's other persons present.
