This was very kind of the sergeant. He was not, to look at, a man from whom such things were to be expected; for he had a harsh and strident voice, full projecting lips and staring eyes. Also, he had very red cheeks, and a way of pushing already quite bald. But when years afterward I heard people talk of the harsh and overbearing way of Judge Jamblin, I remembered that he had once staken pity on a poor girl in grevious trouble, and said words of comfort to her.

Then there was a blare of trumpets and presently the whole court rose to
