ROUGH ON TURKISH FLIRTATION.

The Strange Laws and Customs of a Very, Delightful Country. The afternoon drive is an imaginary contact with the world; for, as a matter of fact, the ladies might almost as well be at home. At 4 o'clock or thereabouts a natty little brougham drawn by a pair of long tailed Russian borses drives up to the door, and the ladies-for they almost invariably drive two and two, a great sady accompanied by a friend or a slave girl—are assisted into the carriage with as much care as if they were made of snow, says ones will even hold a parasol between their faces and the coachman to prevent contamination from side glances.

Most of them, however, start with full in tent to be seen as much as possible, and after settling themselves down on the satin custions and assuring themselves that the mirror is well dusted, the cigarettes and matches in their places, the chocolate creams or nougat fresh from the bakery and the bouquet sweet and properly arranged, slip off the habarah and are ready to front the gaze of the curious. The thinnest of yashmaks covers the reddest of lips and the chin, and well kohled eyes keep a smart lookout for exchange of compliments by passers by. The wives of the pashas do not wear the Turkish transparent yashmak, but cover their months and the lower part of the face with a cambric or cotton burghoo tied round the back of the head. The Shoobra and Gezireh drives are to Cairo much what the Row is to London, and all the Beys and Pashas don their best and either caracole forth on prancing steeds or, more luxuriously, are driven in the train of the harems. If the lady is inclined to exchange flowers, notes, cigarettes or even conversation no hindrance is likely to be offered by the black janitor on the box-seat of the driver. But talking must be done in private, and some sidewalk or otherwise secluded spot must be chosen for anything more than a flying passing compliment, for in the east every man is the guardian not only of his own harem, but also of everybody else's. A man may thrash his own wife to death with very doubtful chances of anybody intervening, bu he may not look at his neighbor's harem.

The Right Training. "My dear friend," said a man, addressing an acquaintance, "why don't you do some thing with your son?" "What's the matter with him?" "Why, I noticed that while he was playing with several little fellows he robbed them of all their marbles," "That's all right."

"All right! My gracious, do you want him to be a robber?" "Yes, that's the drift of my teachings, You see, I am bringing him up to keep a summer hotel."—Arkansaw Traveler.
