Melleville's Phantom.

The wife of Engineer Melleville, the gallant officer of the luckless Arctic exploring steamer Jeannette, compose a picturesque little cottage at Sharon Hill. "Although it has been more than three years since George left us all here," said she, yesterday, "and week out on that ill-fated voyage, and although oceans of cruel water and leagues of land have separated him from us, I have seen him as close within a year. Startling as this statement was, Mrs. Melleville was evidently in earnest. "On the 10th of last June," she continued, "I retired to my room late at night. Days of anxious waiting for news of the steamette without it bringing a ray of hope, had almost caused me to despair of ever seeing my husband. I had fallen into an uneasy sleep, from which one of the children aroused me. It was, perhaps, more than an hour after this, and while I was wide awake, that I became conscious of a strange presence in the room, and, as you may well imagine with what mingled feelings of joy and fear I here I foreigner a vision, looking up, saw him standing by the bed side. Just as plainly as I see you now, I saw him standing by the foot of the bed, as he spoke. His uniform, head-dress and every article of clothing he wore was perfect. He stood for about a minute, then turned slowly around and walked through the door. I was dumbfounded. I thought if it was a ship's bell there could be but one more, and as the door opened I called after him and said "Right hello, the Jeannette is lost," and vanished from the room. At that moment the sitting-room clock struck the hour of four, and it was the morning of the 11th of June. At that very hour on the very morning the Jeannette went down to the fathomless depths of the Arctic Ocean. In the fore-noon of the same day I received the first intimation of the loss of the steamer. Lieutenant Commander Melville, my husband's brother, called at the house and informed me that the Jeannette was lost. I knew from my husband's letters from Siberia that he intended to take the Lena river to the mouth, and then strike across the Arctic ocean to Spitzbergen. I knew, therefore, that the vessel must have been destroyed in the ice. I was dreadfully startled, but I knew that my husband was safe, and I told my self so. When the figure disappeared on the evening of the 10th of June, I was not frightened, and I am not now. I am not a believer in spiritualism, and I do not attempt to explain what I have just told you, but it is a fact, and I have never attempt to forget it from the time of the sailing of the Jeannette. A few weeks after the steamette was lost, I received a letter from my husband, and in the morning, I had written for the day and was sitting in the dining room. The door was opened and in walked my husband. He looked as he always looked when he came home from his cruise. He was dressed in the same clothes that he had on when he left me. He sat down in the very chair that he was in when the figure disappeared on the evening of the 10th of June. I did not say a word. I was dumbfounded, and I looked at him in silence. He looked at me and said: "Why, Mamie, I've come home." He used to call me Mamie. I then found my voice, and I said to him: "Why, George, I thought you were lost." He replied: "Lost! Why, I've been home for a month." I then asked him where he had been, and he said: "Why, I've been to Washington, and I've been to Boston, and I've been to Philadelphia, and I've been to New York, and I've been to Chicago, and I've been to Cincinnati, and I've been to Pittsburgh, and I've been to Baltimore, and I've been to Annapolis, and I've been to Fortress Monroe, and I've been to Norfolk, and I've been to Richmond, and I've been to Petersburg, and I've been to Lynchburg, and I've been to Bristol, and I've been to Knoxville, and I've been to Chattanooga, and I've been to Atlanta, and I've been to Augusta, and I've been to Charleston, and I've been to Wilmington, and I've been to Raleigh, and I've been to Richmond, and I've been to Washington, and I've been to Baltimore, and I've been to Philadelphia, and I've been to New York, and I've been to Boston, and I've been to Portland, and I've been to Bangor, and I've been to Augusta, and I've been to Portland, and I've been to Boston, and I've been to Albany, and I've been to Buffalo, and I've been to Cleveland, and I've been to Toledo, and I've been to Detroit, and I've been to Chicago, and I've been to Milwaukee, and I've been to Minneapolis, and I've been to St. Paul, and I've been to Omaha, and I've been to Cheyenne, and I've been to Salt Lake, and I've been to Virginia City, and I've been to Sacramento, and I've been to San Francisco, and I've been to Portland, and I've been to Seattle, and I've been to Tacoma, and I've been to Victoria, and I've been to Vancouver, and I've been to Portland, and I've been to San Francisco, and I've been to Los Angeles, and I've been to San Diego, and I've been to Yuma, and I've been to Tucson, and I've been to Albuquerque, and I've been to Santa Fe, and I've been to Denver, and I've been to Omaha, and I've been to Kansas City, and I've been to St. Louis, and I've been to Chicago, and I've been to Cincinnati, and I've been to Pittsburgh, and I've been to Baltimore, and I've been to Washington
