Rear-Admiral Radpod of the United States navy appears to have been impressed with the appearance and qualities of the English iron-clad squadron at Lisbon. He reports to his own government that he found at Lisbon the English Channel squadron under command of Vice-Admiral Symonds, consisting of eight powerful iron-clad ships, some of them, he is informed, having a speed of fourteen knots under steam alone. One of them, while the Franklin was there, was sent to sea to the assistance of a large water-logged ship, and towed her into port against a strong wind.

Since strikes are the fashion nowadays, it may be well to notice the little fact that the coal miners' strike in the Borinage, Belgium, which lasted about ten days, cost the men 360,000 francs in wages. Our own coal miners are contemplating constant efforts of the same kind. They will thereby give the dealers an excellent argument with which to raise the price of the enormous quantities of coal stored in the great cities, deprive themselves of wages as long as they stick it out, and, perhaps, succeed ultimately in crippling the coal industry—a thing which will react more severely on them than any one else. For all the coal in the world does not lie in Pennsylvania.—N. Y. Times.

An account from Jamaica represents the prosperity of the island as rapidly approximating that enjoyed prior to emancipation. The statistics of the first year of the new regime show that, though starting with a deficit on the year prior of £60,000, the total revenue was £393,444, with an expenditure of £333,125, thus leaving a surplus of £68,319 over and above all expenditures, including the wiping out of the deficit. These are certainly very remarkable results, and speak much in favour of the wisdom of the home government in doing away with the mongrel universal suffrage that caused the island to languish for so many years, and finally plunged it into all the horrors of a war of races in 1865. The trade of the island is represented as more flourishing than has been known for a long time past, and to the culture of the sugar cane the planters are adding the cultivation of other crops that are found to be almost as profitable as that great staple.
