But expectaassure the reader, have proved a source of tion alone will not suffice—every man who scription; women rushed madly forward to consequences to trade of the withdrawal of the complimentary and appropriate address was preinfinite pleasure and profit. There is a charm in good English writing, so wholly wanting on this side the Atlantic, as to turn that, which in London would be considered merely an ordinary gratification, in Canada into excitement of the most delightful kind. It brings a man home to the scenes of his youth, and in spite of hunger and annexation, makes him feel proud of being a British subject; of being a native of that country which can daily produce books so charmingly written.

It is not the intention to inflict upon our readers any criticism upon the works on our table an empire in imperio may exist, but a review on a review can scarcely do so. Leonard Scott's publications are fac-similes of the original publications; not got up in the cheap and nasty style of ordinary New York publishers, but well printed and fit for binding. Blackwood's Magazine looks like "Old Ebony;" and the London Quarterly Review appears like " Murray's Quarterly." In price only do they differ, the whole five Afrerican books costing barely the price of one London publication! Neither have we spare room for extracts. One sheet is too small to indulge much in that sort of thing, although the best of information is contained in the pages before us. We shall however take advantage of the Westminster Review, to dejump." The scepticism which the Westminster entertains of the prevailing belief, as te the origin of hydrophobia, has been entertained by ourselves for years-the London writer has however the advantage of promulgating it first.
