Vessels leaving the Canada Lakes late in the fall, atter delivering their cargoes, can be profitably employed during the winter months in coasting, instead of being laid up ice-bound and useless in Canada. This advantage is so paramount, that the inhabitants of the War West have petitioned Congress to procure from the Government of Canada the privilege of a free passage up and down the St. Lawrence, in order that their vessels may be profitably employed during the winter months! The clear-sighted Americans see what the duller Canadians are to be coaxed to look at. Vessels engaged in the trade of the Lower Provinces only, are debarred from this great privilege, the North Western coast of America being a very ugly coast and dangerous to be coasting on during winter.

The class of vessels which the Upper Ca-J nadians can best afford to build, viz. brigantines and schooners of moderate burden, are the vessels best adapted for the West India seas and West India trade.
