A SINGLAR CASE OF DROWNING -- On Thursday last, Dr. E. B. Donnelly, Coroner. held an inquest on the body of a young man drowned in the River Sydenham, in the vicity of Dresden, named Alexander Steadam, aged about 18 years. It seems the Steadam rode a horse down to the river t the purpose of allowing the animal to drink, and while the horse was drinking, its fore feet at the fet-lock joint 'knuckled under,' causing the beast to plunge forward into the stream, Steadam at the time being on its back. Swimming out into the river about the middle, the horse turned around made for the shore whence it had started, and strange to say, when land had almost been gained, the rider by some unaccountable means fell of the horse's back, and was drowned within a few feet of dry land, the horse coming out of the river in safety. The body of the deceased was recovered shortly after, but life was wholly extinct.
