Kingston, Canada, March 24. Saturday the 17th March, saw the term tion of the Reciprocity Treaty, which was negotiated eleven years ago by the late Lord Eigin between the British provinces and United States of America, it has been fashion to say, and the assertion has been often made that it has come to be believed many, that the American people are our superiors in statecraft, and that they have a ways succeeded in over-reaching us in their progressed with marvellous rapidity. Lord | have no public spirit; that we are provincials | water after it, which, being the lighter li touching by land, or divided only by water and without any other obstacle interve for hundreds of miles. The result shower the wisdom of Lord Elgin's calculations, and Canada has prospered and profitted greatly by the treaty. The burthens cast upon the joining States by the late stupendous war made it necessary that Congress should revise the entire fiscal system of the country would have been a palpable anomaly, and we have no right, in the exceptional circumstances which the country is placed, to complain of the abrogation of the treaty, however much we may have desired its continuance But the year, 1866 finds Canada stronger, more celf-reliant, and more competent t work out its manifest destiny. A confederation of all the British Provinces in Americ with free commercial intercourse, and ample railroad communication, has become an u gent necessity, and although the scheme propounded at Quebec may have to be revised many of its details, the fact that an early Confederation of the Provinces will take place recognised by leading politicians in all the provinces.
