A MEDICAL EMBROGLIO.

The medicoes of Kingston Idon't agree no distinctive professional rank, and every | Mendez. man is a Physician, Surgeon, Man-Midwife and General Practitioner, they rarely do agree. Feuds arise here that in England, at least, they could not possibly happen. But the Embroglio that we allude to, does not arise so much from personal quarrels as from matters connected with Queen's College. Our readers have seen asignificant parliamentary advertisement in columns, and that 'Notice' requires a little | also later advices from the French West | highly. I believe that the benefits gained | selves and the darkies will be quietly reexplanation.

The Medical School of Kingston is a Branch of the University of Queen's College. The several Professors are appointed so happens the Trustees and the Medical Professors don't happen to think alike, in fact they rarely have done so since the forvery diverse, the Professors either resign wall. This of course they don't like, and it is to rid themselves of this state of dependence, that this 'Notice' to Parliament published. The Professore wish the Medical School to still be an appanage of the University, but they desire it to be under their sole government-themselves to be the judges of the merits, and to be the apwe are about to add trenches a little upon the ideal, and may not be altogether quite correct. What has given rise to the movement other Professors have to one of their own body whom the Trustees won't dismiss, being a special pet of their's; and also, to this 'Notice' will carry. And this latter ! will entirely depend upon the action of the say no, there is no power in Parliament Queen's College of any of its privileges and allowing an 'empire in emperio' to be set up within it. But the talk is that the Trustees, tired of the endless quarrels and dissentions of the Medical Professors, are as anxious to get rid of them as they are to go, at least those in Kingston, including the Principal, and so it is more than possible that the Bill may pass. Thus the read at the meeting this day by Mr. Hague be matter stands-it is a very interesting mat- | hereby adopted as a true and impartial narrater, slightly ludicrous, which makes it the tive.
