BRITISH AMERICA.

America' in Blackwood for Augu Calonies, Lord Carnaryon, though of course previously to his actual assumption of off Inder such circumstances, the views it expresses have some significance.

This writer in Blackwood says that in ciding upon the future of British America the statesmen of our day have at least seven ways before them ; and these, he says, are the

L. Let British America alone, 2. Do no more than colonize the Hudson's Bay Company's territory. Let the colonies drift off and become

4. Let Canada and the Maritime Colonies form a confederation under British protec 5. Let Canada and the Maritime Provinces consolidate into one State.

6. Let the whole, of British America ente into a confederation stretching from the Atlantic to the Pacific. 7. Let the whole of British America consolidated into one State or Empire, and not confederated. Taking the whole of these under review. Blackwood dismissed all of them except the fourth and a portion of the second as imprac ticable or premature. The writer considers it certain that a new British colony, or more than one, will be formed in the Hudson Bay Territory, and that the confederation of Canada and the Maritime Provinces will vinces themselves, as rapidly as circumstances will allow. 'Neither,' he adds, 'admits of dethe north and west, continually reinforced by Nyanza; 6. Life of Bishop Wilson an influx of the hardiest spirits of the Ol-World, are yearly laying the foundations of new States as large as European kingdoms, and developing the marvellous wealth of such new comers into the family of nations as Nevada, Colorado, Dacotab, Nebraska, Montana, and other regions, whose very names are as yet unfamiliar in Europe, it is not be expected that they will permit the Hudson's Bay Company to monopolize and shut up the long line of available territory that stretches from Lake Superior to the basis of the Rocky Mountains-a region rich in min erals, in fisheries, in furs, in forests, and, better than all, in productive arable lands, broad and fertile enough to feed forty millions of people. The Imperial Government must undertake the task, or, in its default will be undertaken by the # mericans, under circumstances and with complications that may lead to war, if the pride and self-respect of the British Government are half what they used to be in the days when Lord Palmerston sprung into bold but enduring popularity, by his famous speech on the Greek question, and his haughty quotation in assertion that wherever a British subject was there was the whole might and majesty find Lord Carnarvon pushing forward the

---THE ITALIAN FLEET.

We find the following in a French correspondence relative to the Italian fleet :-coals, engineers and guns. A contract had been made with English engineers, but the latter declared they were engaged only for times of peace and not for times of war, and | HORRIBLE SUICIDE-A MAN CUTS they withdrew when hostilities were about to commence, that is to say when they were most wanted. Engineers had to be got anyhow, and even this required time. It was also found out at the last, moment that the guns cast in England had not the desired range. This came quite unexpectedly upon the authorities. Depretis, the new Minister of Marine, did all he could within the time to rectify these deficiencies and within a fortnight the fleet put strict enquiry into the facts will be insti-
