gusted with the Fenian Trials at Toronto, we are. 'A great cry and little wool.' array of legal talent, and little whereon to trials of the two Clergymen pleases no one. If the one man was guilty, so was the other. Why make fish of one man and flesh of the other? Juries, it is true, are capricious bodies, and ofttimes yield to prejudices but the singularity in these cases is, that the Jury which convicted Father McMahor was exclusively Protestant, while that which acquitted his brother Protestant Priest, was partly Roman Catholic. The evidence in both cases was nearly alike, but on behalf of the Protestant Divine, came several of the New York ecclesiastics to testify to the goodness of his private character, while the Roman Catholic Clergyman was passed by unnoticed by his fellow Priests. This probably had its due to compassion the ladies of Kingston, who weight with the Jury.
