He was in the by his relatives and former friends, and act of coupling a passenger coach to an en- died in exile forsaken and almost forgotten gine when he met his death. The coach was standing on a curved track. The engine backed up to it closer at one point than at another. Danby tried to couple them and failed to get the pin in its place in time. They came together crushing him to death instantly. His breast was badly bruised. He was twenty-two years of age and a native of Port Hope. He was a great favourite with all the railroad employees and they are deeply grieved at his death. He has worked for a year for the Grand Trunk company. A Boy Fires at a Dog and Kills a Woman

-Painful Circumstances. FREDERICTON, N.B., Jan. 5, -On Monday while Allen Ballantyne, aged 17 years, was passing Mrs. Luke Lawson's house at Lake George a dog barked at him. He drew a revolver and fired, but instead of hitting the dog the bullet crashed through a window entered the breast and pierced the region of the heart of Mrs. Lawson, who was looking out of the window. She threw her arms in the air and exclaimed, "My God, I'm shot." The boy ran into the house, where she was writhing in a death agony, but was unable to render the dying woman assistance. He ran for his mother, who soon arrived with other neighbors, only to witness the victim gasping her last breath. Ballantyne's father brought the boy to Fredericton and handed him over to the authorities, and the boy was gaoled. Mrs. Lawson was aged 22 years and the mother of two children.

RIOTERS SENTENCED.

Irishmensent to Prison for Various Terms -Cause of the Riots.

DUBLIN, Jan. 5. - Thefifty-six men, arrested last August, for resisting the collection of rents, and eviction on the Clanricard estate, at Woodford Galway, were to-day sentenced to various terms of imprisonment, ranging from twelve to eighteen months. The judge censured the inspectors of police and the local magistrates, for allowing the rioting. General Sir Redvers Buller, on special military command in Ireland, caused it to be known that he would not permit the military to be used in eviction work, without first being convinced that their assistance was absolutely necessary. This of course, withdrew from the sheriff the military, and the landlords contended, created a situation encouraging lawessness and rioting on the part of defaulting tenants.

A Cure for the Disease.

There is said to be a number of cases o diphtheria in the city, and as remedies for the loathsome disease are readily accepted we present one. R. Munch, proprietor of a drug establishment in Leipsig, Saxony, recommends rectified oil of turpentine. Dose, one teaspoonful in the morning and the same at evening. Drink lukewarm milk to allay the burning in the throat. For children the second dose can be mixed with milk. The inflammation of the abnormal ciptheric spots in the throat grow lighter at the edges, and in this way they gradually shrink until in twenty four hours they disappear entirely. To quiet the inflamed tonsils the throat should be gargled at first every two hours, with : One ounces chlorate of potash to four ounces distilled water. This remedy has been used both by adults and children, not one case ending fatally.

BROADBRIM'S LETTER.

ROMANCES OF THE AGE, AND HOW THEY ORIGINATED.

Men About Whom There is a Difference of Opinion-A Peculiar Case-Women Who Rise Rapidly in the Social Scale-Training Children 4h Crime-The Political Struggle.

BROOKLYN, Jan. 5. - A few days ago all that was mortal of a man who had once been quite a conspicious figure in this city was borne to its last resting place at Cypress Hills, and the pall-bearers were some of the most distinguished men in the state. There were lawyers and doctors, judges of the courts, musicians and actors, politicians and clubmen, men eminent in science and literature, and a vast crowd of critics and reporters. The man around whose bier they were congregated was an Irishman named Edmond O'Flaherty, but who, disowning the country which honored him by giving him birth, chose the name of William Stuart, by which name he was knownfor the last thirty years in this metropolis. He came to this country to escape the consequences of an oftill the news of his death suddenly startled the remembrance of the town to what he had been in the past. Romantic lives are not uncommon here. In a walk down Broadway almost any afternoon, you can jostle against millionaires, the sound of whose names shake the financial centres of the world; bankrupts whose failures have made the whole land tremble; ministers, literateurs, gamblers, thieves and soiled doves. Yes, romantic lives are plenty, and perhaps those who record them for the daily press are not the least romantic o them all. Edmond O'Flaherty at his death has been deified and execrated, and as write two press notices of his decease lie on the table before me. Both of them are from leading papers, and both of them would seem entitled to equal credit. "He was a good soul," writes one, "kind, generous and true, with brilliant talents and varied accomplishments, which marked him as one of the last of the generation of gentlemen of the old school. He was alike at home in the company of the ordinary Bohemian and men of the noblest lineage and most distinguished intellect. He was a gentleman of brilliant conversational powers, and as a ranconteur he leaves few equals behind him. These admirable qualities made him ever a welcome guest at the principal clubs and the tables of the great where his loss will be deeply mourned by those who knew him best and loved him." The other writes: "The death in poverty and obscurity, better know as William Stuart, enables a large amount of Bohemian gush and displays an amazing amount of journalistic ignorance in the New York papers to-day. The man had ceased from public view for years, and while he was on view he was neither an honorable nor admirable object; his was a Swiss pen, at the service of any cause or theory when he himself might profit. He could write with power and polish, but he lacked principle to ballast hisbrilliantly rotten abilities; his character was so repulsive. his literary talents so predatory, and living habits so conscienceless, that his very abilities were the servants of a viciousness that the press is well rid of, when his kind drop into the forced inactivity of the grave.

The man's end in obscurity and poverty

These are the two obituaries.

should be a lesson to all young men who seek to enter on a metropolitan life. Twenty-five years ago he was one of the most opular men in the city. He was then proprietor of the Winter Garden, the fashionable theatre of New York, and while there he introduced Matilda Heron and Edwin Booth to the American public. His reckless management brought the theatre to financial ruin, and thereafter Mr. O'Flaherty lived by his wits, occasionally writing brilliant but utterly unreliable articles for newspapers and magazines. He started life with golden prospects, being allied to one of the best families in Ireland. He received a first class collegiate education, and, easily gaining admission into the most distinguished society, married one of the most beautiful and talented women in Great Britain, and after two or three years of the wildest dissipation was driven into exile. Instead of trying to reform he kept up a style of living which astonished those who knew him best, gave luxurious dinners to bon vivants, dis sipated roues like himself, and paid for them with worthless notes. The prodigal liver, the once petted favorite of fortune, at last, deserted by the friends of his more prosperous days, and banished from the clubs where he had once been the most houored guest, found refuge in cheap rooms in one of the commonest quarters of the city. There, for the past few years, he eked out a miserable existence, dependent on the bounty of the friends which his reckless improvidence and dissipation left him. Even in this wretched estate he attempted to keep up his former style by retaining a valet at a time he hardly knew where his breakfast or dinner was coming from. This faithful servant stuck to him with a devotion truly touching, for he recognized, even in his squalid misery and rags, the descendant of the bould O'Flaherty, who stood beside the great Brian at Clontarf, or sent death into the ranks of the Sassanach at Vinegar Hill, or dyed with Saxon blood the clear waters of the Boyne. When mortal aid could no longer reach him the magnates of the city gathered around his bier and gave him a christian burial, and in due time a monument will rise to mark the spot where he reposes. But the young journalist who seeks the metropolis to carve his way to fame would do well to profit by this wasted life, devoted mainly to unworthy ends, to wild dissipation, and personal gratification, Notwithstanding his transcendant ability

Dead Sea fruit of ashes. Yet the romance of this man's life is as nothing to that of a couple of women who have created quite a sensation. The jewels which decorate the persons of these fortunate or unfortunate dames is said in one case to be werth $750,000, and in the other over a million and a half of dollars. Both were servants at the start, both had unfortunate matrimonial ventures, one considers herself unfortunate in being a wife still, and the other esteems herself one of the most fortunate of human beings in being that and brilliant opportunities he leaves nothing behind to mark his having been but the

dear, delightful; adorable thing, a widow. Madam Terry, the lucky inheritor by her second marriage of over twenty millions of dollars, was the barmaid of a tap-room in Liverpool. When there she met an American thief and forger and married him, and for several years thereafter shared his fortune. Justice at last overtook him; he was sent to States prison, and the felon's wife was fortunate enough to captivate the millionaire Terry, who, dying, left her all his fortune, making her one of the richest women in the United States. The other started as a servant, and after a life of the strangest vicissitudes, oscillating between the slums and stage, achieved a marriage with one of the most distinguished scientists in the city of Washington. Two years ago last fall a lady might be seen early every morning dashing like mad around the concourse back of the White House, and, after a wild ride that might have made Fred. Archer's hair stand on end, disappeared as suddenly as she came, and the question was, Who is she? The late President Arthur used to stand at his window and watch her, and he was a great admi.er of her wild and daring horsemanship. This is female No. 2, from a kitchen to a palace, from a brass ring and pinchbeck jewellery to $700,000 of the rarest jewels in the world.

Lillian Smith, the child-thief, is our latest sensation, and one that brings us face to face with the unpleasant fact that in New York, where we send missionaries to the Congo and to China and the Fegee, thieving is taught as a fine art, and there are men and women in this christian land who can sit down and coolly train little children to a life of crime whose end is misery and death. We have prodigies, plenty of them, children precocious in almost every walk of life, but never before have we been called upon to chronicle a case of moral depravity like that of Lillian Smith, the child-thief. She stole apparently because she liked to do it, and took the usual precaution of older female thieves of destroying the pocket books and hiding the proceeds of her plunder in her stockings. It is to be hoped that some means may be discovered to save her from a life of misery and shame. But years after her case will be considered one of the phenomena of the criminal calendar of New York. It is rumoured that those interested in maintaining the German opera are making savage attacks on the American opera which is the especial pride of New York. For the development of American talent some hundreds of thousands of dollars have been invested, and that by parties who did it for pleasure, not profit, and who never expected to see their money again. Mrs. Thurber, the chief patroness of the undertaking, has worked like a beaver since its first inception for success. Theodore Thomas, one of the first musicions in the United States, has staked his reputation on it, but it looks as if there was pre-concert among the critics, for every mishap is heralded from Dan to Bethsheba, and every rumour of failure magnified a thousand fold. I can only say it has not been a failure in New York or Brooklyn. The performances have been most excellent and have given the greatest satisfaction. We are doing some tall political figuring here for the coming senatorial election, and it is not an easy matter to tell who has got the inside track. It looks very Mortonish now, but no man can tell what a day may bring forth. Warner Miller is still a very lively ghost, as some folks may discover before the ides of March. We can only watch results, and may the best man win is the sincere wish of -BROADBRIM.

Reasons for an Election.

OTTAWA, Jan. 6. -One reason for holding the election before parliament meets is that many constituencies in Ontario and Quebec, at the provincial elections, where, in 1882, conservatives were returned to the federal parliament, have pronounced themselves thoroughly liberal in the provincial legislature. If parliament meets these conservatives will have to vote, and if they still support Sir John Macdonald they will be sure of defeat when they return for general
