FOR LOVE OR MONEY.

TRUE AFFECTION CANNOT BE CONCEALED OR KILLED.

Love Does Not Run Smooth Always, But it Will Triumph in the End.

Written by Fidels

Meantime the lovers were floating slowly down the river in the soft September moonlight, and Edwin was explaining to Bessie, as gently as we could, the necessity for his immediate departure. In vain she begged him so far to humor his mother as to suspend the engagement for a time till she should become more reconciled to it. Edwin refused to think of such a thing for a moment. In any case he said he must go after his mother's words he could not remain another day in dependence upon her. He had been too long an idler! In the nearest large city he could surely find some work to do, and try to make a career for himself. "And perhaps by this time next year, I may have made a home to take you to, my darling!" he said, with an attempt at a smile.

After their row was over and they had returned to the house, they sat for hours talking together, trying to remember all the things that, to-morrow, they would wish to have said before parting. Then came the trying last moment, and each tried for the other's sake to be brave and hopeful, and tore themselves apart, to spend the rest of the night in a vain endeavor to realize the sudden separation.

Her guests departed Mrs. Carter's conscience and maternal feeling, repressed as they were by pride, asserted themselves enough to make her conscious of having gone too far. She had never seen such a look on Edwin's face before and knew that her words must have stung him deeply. Tired out, as she was, she did not feel equal to meeting him again that night, but, in the morning she would make him forget her hasty words, and try to gain her end by gentler means.

But, when she came down, in the bright breezy September morning, it was to find only one place set at the well appointed breakfast table. Mr. Edwin had had his breakfast already, ma'ma," said the maid. "He said he had to go off by the early train, and that you would know why."

Mrs. Carter resolutely suppressed all sign of emotion; but her heart sank with a terrible dread. Had Edwin so hastily taken her at her word; and where had he gone, or what would he do? All day she kept up the hope that he might return by evening; but night came she lay awake through the long hours in sleepless anxiety. But that day grew into the next, and days into weeks, and still the absentee did not return; and she daily scanned her letters in vain for the familiar hand-writing, one line of which could have been so precious now. She bore in silence, as best she could, her heavy burden of suspense and anxiety, and confided her trouble to no one. She had at first explained Edwin's absence to her friends lightly, as an every day affair, but his prolonged absence, and her evident suffering and look of anxiety, led most people to conclude, ere long, that something was amiss. Kate Longley, at any rate soon ascertained the real state of the case, in a confidential talk with Bessie Stuart, whom she now frequently visited to show her sympathy with her in Edwin's mysterious absence. Mrs. Carter, of course knew that Bessie must be able to give her tidings of her son, but she could not bring herself to ask for this from a girl whom she had refused to acknowledge as his fiancée. But Bessie could not have told her little more than his post office address; since, while he always wrote loving and tolerably cheerful letters, he never gave any particulars in regard to his daily life.

No human being knew the inward torture endured by the proud, silent mother, as the Autumn days grew shorter and more dreary while, in what seemed the oppressive stillness of the house, especially through the interminable evenings, she could sit, sad and solitary, involuntarily listening for the familiar quick foot fall in the hall, or on the stairs. She never invited guests new; she could not have mustered the spirit for entertaining them, or nerved herself to meet the inevitable enquiries for Edwin. Miss Longley and one or two old friends occasionally dropped in, avoiding what they saw was a painful subject. But even from their society she shrank; and refusing all invitations, she preferred to spend the long hours alone, in her luxurious but sorrowful home, still watching, with inexpressible yearning, for word or token from the son who seemed as much lost to her as if the grave had closed over her. She tried to solace herself a little by devising and working up some elaborate Christmas gifts for him. He did not seem quite so much divided from her when she was working at something that he might use or wear; and though she had never cared much about Christmas before, it had begun to haunt her imagination now, as a time for the return of wanderers, and the healing of estrangements. Surely Edwin would have had enough of his self exile, and would come home for Christmas! Perhaps he would be wiser then. If not—well, perhaps—she would be! But when the wild, Autumn winds were wailing and the cold rain falling outside her heavily curtained windows, she would drop her work, and sit looking blankly into the softly glowing fire, longing with a desire that often became a prayer that she could only see or know how her wandering boy was faring then!

It was well for her peace of mind, that she could not see her son, on one of those evenings. In a bare little room,—his dress so soiled and careless that she would scarcely have recognized him,—he sat, with his head bowed on his arms, as they rested on the little table before him, in an attitude of utter dejection. Only those who have tried it know how hard it is for a young man, without special training for any particular work,—to step into regular employment. Edwin had applied to all the people he knew, answered all the advertisements he could find, gone the round of all the newspapers offices; and as yet his hopes of "making a career" for himself seemed as far off as ever. Every place seemed filled, except such as required some special training which he had not. He had picked up one or two stray bits of work and had been paid for one or two articles that chanced to hit the taste of an editor; but, at present his purse was all but empty, and "hope deferred" had made him very heart sick. His thoughts naturally went back to the pleasant home he had left and to the solitary mother in it—to whom he could not yet bring himself to write; but, even now, he would not have chosen to go back, at the cost of his self respect.

ENGLISH ADVENTURESSES.

A Matrimonial Swindle That Was Played With Great Success in Paris.

PARIS, Jan. 5.—Two English adventures have been arrested here, charged with swindling. The prisoners gave the names of Mrs. Linsay and Miss Evelyn Rappy. The latter is a beautiful woman about 25 years of age. Mrs. Linsay passed as Miss Rappy's mother or guardian as occasion required. The women caused to be published advertisements making it known that a young widow, with a million sterling in her own right, or a rich young girl, who made a false step, was desirous of forming marital alliance with a gentleman who could appreciate the situation and who had means sufficient to warrant that on his side marriage was not entirely a speculation. As a result of the advertisements, Miss Rappy engaged herself to a number of Frenchmen, managing to keep alive their ardour until she had exhausted their ability to make presents, and successively married several of them, or wealthy admirers, securing the best settlement possible, and managing to escape with the wedding presents and other personal property obtainable after the ceremony. Miss Rappy played this marriage trick with great success in England before she sought new victims in France, and it is said all of her dupes have been of high social or political position, that they have been ashamed to seek redress. When Miss Rappy was taken into custody she was at a first-class hotel, living in a grand suite of rooms, in a style befitting a princess, and was on the point of being married to a man who had already paid right royally for the betrothal, and had invested a snug fortune in wedding presents. The prisoner broke down and made a complete confession. She asserted that Mrs. Linsay completely controlled her.

Health Preserved

Is without doubt the jewel of great price, and the one least valued. Disregard of symptoms that clearly indicate abnormal action of the liver, stomach or bowels is nothing less than criminal. Health through neglect too often vanishes like a "Will O' the Wisp," and the anxious seeker secures but pain and disappointment for his labor. No aid towards the preservation of health can surpass Hamilton's Pills of Mandrake and Butter-nut. These pills, being composed of vegetable substances, exert their remedial action without the evil effects too often following the use of pills containing mercury. For all bilious disorders they will even prove a positive specific. Hamilton's Pills are sold by all dealers in medicine, and by Polson & Co., Kingston.

To Our Readers.

If you suffer from headache, dizziness, back ache, biliousness or humors of the blood try Burdock Blood Bitters. It is a guaranteed cure for all irregularities of blood, liver and kidneys.

A nasal injector free with each bottle of Shiloh's catarrh remedy. Price 50c.

Advice to Mothers.

Mrs Winslow's Soothing Syrup should always be used when children are cutting teeth. It relieves the little sufferer at once; it produces natural, quiet sleep by relieving the child from pain, and the little cherub awakes as "bright as a button." It is very pleasant to the taste. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, relieves wind, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for diarrhoea, whether arising from teething or other causes. Twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup, and taken other kind.

A Cure For Drunkenness.

Opium, morphine, chloral, tobacco and kindred habits. The medicine may be given in tea or coffee without the knowledge of the person taking it if so desired. Send 6c. in stamps, for book and testimonials from those who have been cured. Address M. V. Lubon, 47 Wellington St. East, Toronto, Ont. Cut this out for future reference. When writing mention this paper.

Well Spoken Of.

"I can recommend Hagyard's Yellow Oil very highly. It cured me of rheumatism in my fingers when I could not bend them." Ida Plank, Strathroy, Ont. A medicine for internal and external use in all painful complaints.

Shiloh's Vitalizer is what you need for constipation, loss of appetite, dizziness, and all symptoms of dyspepsia. Price 10 and 75 cents per bottle. W. J. Wilson, agent.

Faithful.

J. R. Faithful, of Stroud, Ont., says he suffered from quinsy for several years, until cured by Hagyard's Yellow Oil, which medicine is a specific for all painful complaints.
