FOR LOVE OR MONEY.

TRUE AFFECTION CANNOT BE CONCEALED OR KILLED.

Love Does Not Run Smooth Always, But It Will Triumph in the End.

Written by Fidelis. He was roused by a knock at the door, quickly followed by the entrance of a young man in rough working clothes, soiled and greasy and looking pale and haggard.

"Played out, Dick?" asked Edwin in a sympathetic tone.

"Another of us gone!" exclaimed the young man moodily, as he sank into a chair.

"Yes!—Poor Sam Baker's all smashed up. Isn't expected to live until morning."

Edwin sighed heavily. He had been learning, of late, to know something of the severe hardships and culpable exposure to danger of a class of men who risked life and limb in the service of corporations to which the Golden Rule seemed non-existent.

Should his hopes of literary success ever be fulfilled he intended to do his best to call attention to the wrongs of brakemen. Suddenly an idea occurred to him. Why not try the work himself? It would be honest employment, at least until he could get something better.

And the personal experience would give force and color to his writing, should he ever have the chance. At any rate, he felt as if he was driven to bay, and would welcome any honest work.

"I wonder if they would take me in Baker's place," he said presently.

"You! Why, man, you couldn't stand it a month! and it's as risky as going into a battle."

"Well, I don't see why not I, as well as another! You've had pretty good luck. And it would keep me going till I could hear of something better!" said Edwin, quietly.

"All right, old fellow! If you really want the berth I'll go with you to the boss this minute. I'll undertake to show you the ropes. And there's no time to lose? men's lives are cheap these times."

Two or three days before Christmas Miss Longley and her father went to spend the holidays with relatives in the city.

Knowing that this was Edwin's present abode her kind ingenuity had secured an invitation for Bessie Stuart also, who was to follow them on Christmas eve. By this means she hoped not only to secure for the lovers a happy meeting, but also to be able to give Mrs. Carter, on her return, the tidings of her son which she knew that she was longing to hear, though she never spoke his name.

She was destined to see Edwin sooner than she could have expected. As she stood on the platform, waiting for her father to secure their baggage a young brakeman hurried passed her—a strong light falling on his face as he did so.

Notwithstanding his rough working garb she recognized him at once, with a start of astonishment; it was Edwin Carter, beyond a doubt. But he had already disappeared in the darkness, and she could only tell her father, as they drove in their cab to their destination; while tears rose in her eyes as she thought how poor Ned must have suffered before he had come to this? Mr. Longley promised to look him up to-morrow, and get him out of such unsuitable employment.

But "to-morrow" is often too late for what we propose to do? Mr. Longley returned to his daughter with a face so grave that she at once asked, what was the matter.

"There has been an accident, my dear," he said. "Poor Carter has broken his leg. The old story. Too long hours, loss of sleep then a slip—and this! It's a horrid shame how these poor men are treated, but they've taken him to the hospital, and he's likely to do well."

"To the hospital, Papa?"

"Yes!—and why not? He'll be best attended to there. I've got him a private room, and he'll have every care."

"Oh, papa, I must go for his mother at once. Poor Mrs. Carter! I'm afraid this will break her down altogether. I can go alone quite well, and I shall bring her back with me."

Kate had her way, and lost no time about it. On the forenoon of Christmas eve, Mrs. Carter was sitting alone,—the slow tears dropping,—dropping, at her neglected work. Poor woman she looked ten years older, since Edwin's departure. The Christmas joy that was in the air about her was too much for her burdened heart. A merry party of boys and girls had just arrived from school at the house of a neighbor not far from her own, and when the last of the arrivals, a tall, active youth, met his mother at the door, she had turned away with a breaking heart.

When Miss Longley's quick step sounded in the hall, she started up in vague expectation. Could it be? But it was only Kate Longley, whom she had supposed many miles away, and who was trying hard to calm her own agitation sufficiently to break her news quietly.

But Mrs. Carter bore it much better than Kate had expected, and as she hastily rose to prepare for her journey there was more life in her eye and step than there had been for months. For now, she could do something for her boy.

When, late that night, the mother arrived at the hospital, she found that Edwin was just dropping off to sleep, under the influence of a soporific, and that he must not be disturbed. With a strong effort at self control, she kept out of sight until he was asleep, and then sat down to watch, silently, her unconscious boy, wiping away many a tear that would well up at sight of his pale, languid face, bearing visible marks of suffering and privation. As she sat there through the long hours of the night, and heard the distant chimes ring in the Christmas morning, it seemed as if a strange gentleness and peace took possession of her heart, not disturbed even when she heard her son in his troubled sleep, plaintively murmur "Bessie" several times, before she at length caught the word "Mother." She remembered something she had lately read about becoming as "little children" in order to be the follower of Him who came as a little child, and it seemed to her that a child's spirit had come to her at last, and that she would never again rebel against any leading of God's providence.

When Miss Longley arrived on Christmas morning to ask for Edwin he still slept and his mother's first question was how Miss Stuart could be sent for at once. Kate smilingly replied that this would not be difficult as Bessie had arrived the previous day, and was even then anxiously waiting outside.

And so it happened that when Edwin at last opened his eyes it was to see his mother standing beside him, with Bessie's hand in hers, and to feel that transferred to his own, with the wonderful words from his mother, "This is your Christmas gift, Edwin."

"Thank God, and you, mother," was all he could reply, but the words and a smile such as she had never received from Edwin before rewarded the mother sufficiently for her victory over herself.

"It's a shame that that man drinks so much," said a man in a bar-room, indicating a very much intoxicated individual. "Never mind, ole fel," responded the latter, who overheard the remark; "needn't be 'fraid; you'll go—hic—all you need."

Health Preserved

Is without doubt the jewel of great price, and the one least valued. Disregard of symptoms that clearly indicate abnormal action of the liver, stomach or bowels is nothing less than criminal. Health through neglect too often vanishes like a "Will O' the Wisp," and the anxious seeker secures but pain and disappointment for his labor. No aid towards the preservation of health can surpass Hamilton's Pills of Mandrake and Butter-nut. These pills, being composed of vegetable substances, exert their remedial action without the evil effects too often following the use of pills containing mercury. For all bilious disorders they will even prove a positive specific. Hamilton's Pills are sold by all dealers in medicine, and by Polson & Co., Kingston.

Special Attention

should always be given to the hair and scalp Dr. Dorenwend's "Hair Magic," used once in a while, will keep the hair and scalp in a clean, healthy condition. CONSUMPTION, which is Scrofulous Disease of the Lungs, is promptly and certainly arrested, and cured by this God-given remedy, if taken before the last stages of the disease are reached. From its wonderful power over this terribly fatal disease, when first offering this now celebrated remedy to the public, Dr. PIERCE thought seriously of calling it his "Consumption Cure," but abandoned that name as too limited for a medicine which, from its wonderful combination of tonic, or strengthening, alterative, or blood-cleansing, anti-bilious, and nutritive properties, is unequalled, not only as a remedy for consumption of the lungs, but for all

CHRONIC DISEASES OF THE Liver, Blood, and Lungs.

If you feel dull, drowsy, debilitated, have a yellow color of skin, or yellowish-brown spots on face or body, frequent headache or dizziness, bad taste in mouth, internal heat or chills alternating with hot flashes, low spirits and gloomy forebodings, irregular appetite, and coated tongue, you are suffering from Indigestion, Dyspepsia, and Ferried Liver, or "Biliousness." In many cases out of part of these symptoms are experienced. As a remedy for all such cases, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has no equal.

For Weak Lungs, Spitting of Blood, Shortness of Breath, Bronchitis, Severe Coughs, Consumption, and kindred affections, it is a sovereign remedy. Send ten cents in stamps for Dr. Pierce's book on Consumption. Sold by Druggists.
