CONFESSED TO MURDER.

CAUSES LEADING TO THE SHOOT-ING OF REV. MR. HADDOCK.

Fighting the Whiskey Men-Opposition to an Amendment-Men Laying in Wait to Kill a Clergyman - The Knell of Doom Sounded to the Saloon Men.

REV. GEOBGE C. HADDOCK.

SIOUX CITY, Ind., Jan. 12.—Paul Leader, one of the men under indictment for the murder of Rev. George C. Haddock, has confessed being an eye witness of the murder and has related the incidents. This crime was one of the strangest and yet most villainous in the history of the state. It has taken extra importance from its connection with the temperance question, and from the fact that Methodist ministers every where uphold Haddock as a martyr not only to his religious convictions but to the cause of temperance, or rather of total abstinence, as championed by that church. The events briefly are these: Sioux City was one of the few places which public sentiment in Iowa kept practically, though not legally, exempt from the workings of the prohibitory law. It is a town of 20,000 inhabitants, and one of its industries was brewing and the extensive sale of beer and ardent spirits by retailers. In 1884 a constitutional amendment was adopted, prohibiting the manufacture of beer and wines or their sale in the state. The supreme court declared the amendment unconstitutional, but a law was then passed, with heavy penalties, to the same effect, and allowed to stand. In Sioux City the battle was the hottest, and the law practically disregarded. Officers, judges, and people were bought up by the liquor interest. The opposition formed a law and order league, and at the head of it placed Rev. George Haddock, who had lately come there as pastor of a Methodist church. Suits were begun and evidence secured. With a courage which could not but excite admiration Haddock bore the brunt of the fight and combatted fearlessly the forces of the liquor sellers. A conspiracy was formed to thrash the zealot, and, if necessary, to murder him. He knew of the danger, but did not falter in what he thought to be his conscientious duty. On Tuesday evening, Aug. 22nd, 1886, Rev. George Haddock, little suspecting the assassins who lay in wait for him, returned from a drive to a suspected resort, and entered the stables near which he was to meet his fate. In a neighboring saloon was a crowd of half-drunken conspirators, and John Arensdorf, the Belgian brewer. Arensdorf was desperate. His business was being ruined by the indefatigable minister, and he saw but one alternative. He approved and would help the conspirators. Followed by Leader and eight others, he awaited near the stables, in a dark corner, the minister's coming. Haddock left the stables, crossed the road, and as he passed by the fatal spot, Arensdorf stepped forward, placed a pistol at the minister's head. and shot him dead in his tracks. The conspirators scattered. But the crack of the assassin's pistol was the knell of doom to the saloons.

Arensdorf was arrested at Davenport, and placed under $45,000 bends. The United States district attorney entered the case, and the grand jury, which contained six liquor men, indicted every one of the conspirators for murder in the first degree and conspiracy. Such is the sequel to a crime which in elaborate detail, number of parties concerned, and desperateness of purpose, has few parallels, even in the bloody annals of lawless western civilization.

Rev. George C. Haddock, the murdered man was born at Watertown, N. Y. in 1831 and received a fair education at the Black River Institute. As a printer he worked in various places. He settled at Beaver Dam, Wis., and published a paper. In 1863 he entered the methodist ministry. In October, 1885, he removed to Sioux City, and fell a martyr to his principles. He was a man of powerful physique. It is related of him that while advocating temperance in Sheboygan Falls, Wis., he was waylaid by five or six men. Although surprised by the attack he quickly rallied, and, placing himself against a fence, knocked his assailants down as fast as they came up. Finally the roughs fled. At another time, while preaching on temperance in Wisconsin, he aroused the ire of the village blacksmith who waited for him till the meeting was out and undertook to thrash him. A rough and tumble fight ensued in which the blacksmith was badly worsted. The blacksmith became a total abstainer, and is now one of the most rabid prohibitionists in his district. Mr. Haddock's only child, Frank C. Haddock engaged in the practice of law for the past two years at Oskkosh, Wis., has just returned to the ministry and accepted a call from a congregational church at Bagely, Iowa.

If the Sufferers from Consumption, Scrofula, and general debility, will try Scott's Emulsion of pure cod liver oil, with hypophosphites, they will find immediate relief and a permanent benefit. Dr. H. V. Mott, Brentwood, Cal. writes : "I have used Scott's Emulsion with great advantage in cases of phthisis, scrofula, and wasting diseases generally. It is very palatable."

LETTERS TO THE PEOPLE.

The School of Science.

KINGSTON, Jan. 14. - (To the Editor): All Kingstoniars, whatever their political tendencies may be, must unite in the hope that the provincial government will regard favorably the memorial of the city council, which will doubtless be endorsed by the county council in regard to the establishment of a school of practical and applied science here. As has been pointed out in the Whig this is no part of the necessary equipment of a university, though a chair of technology is sometimes attached to it when it has the means for maintaining it. Queen's university, as we all know, has had a hard fight for the means of providing its present honorable standard of equipment; so that it could not be expected to do more in the direction of practical or applied science. But the facilities which are afforded to students of science by its presence in Kingston, with its professorial staff and sciientific appliances, would afford to a school of science established here such an immense advantage, that if a science school is to be established in eastern Ontario at all, Kingston is clearly the place for it, and as eastern Ontario has done so much to educate herself she clearly deserves the help which is proverbially supposed to be given to those who help themselves.

Of course it would be possible for the Ontario government to take a somewhat different view of our desert. A city which has again, by its elective vote, freshly challenged the provincial gove.nment, returning an opposition candidate and thereby endorsing the tactics of its enemies, must necessarily find it a little awkward to assume so soon the attitude of a suppliant. The Ontario government might say, with Shylock, to our civic representatives:

"Well then it now appears, you need our help. Fair sirs, you flouted us on—(Dec. 28th)— You spurned us such a day; another time You called us dog, and for these courtesies We'll grant you this much moneys."

But I have too much respect for our Ontario government to suppose that they could adopt the role of Shylock. I prefer to believe that they are capable of showing the magnanimity urged by Portea, of which she

"It blesseth him that gives and him that takes; Tis mightiest in the mightest, And earthly power doth then show likest God's

When mercy seasons justice. Besides they will not forget that there is even in Kingston a "remnant," and that remnant composed, as is usual in such cases, of the more thoughtful and intelligent class of electors who are the people chiefly interested in such a petition, and they would hardly wish to punish their friends in order to spite their enemies. They have, therefore, a fine opportunity of showing a generosity which should shame their detractors into silence, gratify their friends and supporters, and perhaps win over some hitherto obstinate opponents. It would also quench the old well-worn party cry about the normal school, which has always seemed to me most unreasonable and unjust. Ottawa, from its position had, and pressed, its paramount claims, as a more natural and suitable site for a second normal school, while to give a third to Kingston prematurely would certainly have been denounced as a job for avoiding which Mr. Mowat has been most unfairly blamed. Even in a party aspect, after Kingston had, at the local elections of 1879 and 1883, twice in succession condemned the government and its whole educational policy, would it not have seemed in the highest degree absurd gratuitously to carry out and force that policy on a place which rejected it.

But the present project of a school of science is one which should be warmly urged by Kingston reformers, who could then point with truth to the benefits conferred on the city by a much maligned legislature. It would add another to the already numerous educational advantages which attract strangers to the city. A school of science is the one thing it yet needs to make its educational equipment abreast of the requirements of the age. It would, of course, be a benefit to the whole surrounding country. No one can tell how much latent ability it might develop and utilize. To young men with scientific tastes it would open up a field of useful and lucrative employment, which, in a country like ours, is practically inexhaustible. In order to develop our natural resources we now are continually obliged to call in the aid of foreign specialists. How much better it would be if we could educate our young men for this appropriate work. The professions of law and medicine are, as we all know, getting overcrowded, but there is an almost boundless professional field, honourable and lucrative, the gateway to which is a school of practical and applied science. - Yours, etc., Civis.

THE MILITARY LIBEL

Opening of the Case of Col. Amyot Against Israel Tarte at Quebec.

Quebec, Jan. 13.—The court house was crowded when the libel case of Amyot, vs. Tarte was commenced. Mr. L. P. Pelletier opened the case for Mr. Amyot, reviewing the circumstances which led to the institution of the suit. He attributed the attacksmade on Col Amyot to malice on account of his opposition to the Macdonald government, Dr. Couture, veterinary surgeon, deposed that the farmer's horse, which Col. Amyot had been accused of keeping, was sick when he was called to see it, and was not worth more than $60. Senator Pelletier considered that the articles complained of were of a nature to severely damage the reputation of Col. Amyot, if proved correct. Mr. Demers, publisher of the Canadian and L'Evenement, deposed that he was in Europe when the articles complained of were published. Mr. Tarte admitted writing the article, and that during the absence of Col. Amyot in the north-west he had published articles landatory of him and of his battalion. This, however, was previous to Col. Amyot's condemnation of the Macdonald government. Mr. Tarte averred that he founded his accusations against Col. Amyot on facts gathered from the records at Ottawa and other sources. Several other witnesses deposed that the articles referred to were of a character calculated to injuriously affect the reputation both of the colo nel and of the battalion.

The deceased was to have spent Christmas at home, but sickness prevented, and he concealed it with the kindliest purpose of saving anxiety and alarm here. It was not until the diseased shewed alarming symptoms that his relatives were notified, and then the fatal ending was too truly apparent. He was nursed with great tenderness by his friends at Ottawa, and this week Mrs. Voigt and Miss Voigt, as soon as apprised of the illness, added their loving care. The death has been almost a sudden shock, and one of great serrow, for the deceased was beloved as are few young men, for his great gentleness of character, his devotion to his family, and his sterling character.
