POMEROY'S
PETROLINE
POROUS PLASTER
 Cures Backache, Lung Troubles, Kidney Diseases, Rheumatism, Etc.

A trial will convince the most sceptical that they are the best. They are medicated with capsicum and the active principle of petroleum, being far more powerful in their action than other plasters. Do not be induced to take others, but be sure and get the genuine "Petroline," which is always enclosed in an envelope with the signature of the proprietors. The P. W. P. Co., and directions in four languages; also seal on front of each box of each plaster. Sold by first-class druggists at 25 cents each.

PEDACURA

YOU SAID!

You said that you would come again
 When winter's storms were o'er,
 When hawthorns blossomed in the lane,
 And spring was green once more;
 But now the ripening corn is high,
 The hawthorn-bloom is shed,
 The golden summer days pass by,
 And all my hope is dead!

You said, where'er your steps might range,
 Your heart would still be mine;
 You said true love could never change,
 For it was made divine.
 But now I've learnt that lovers' vows
 Are changeable as the moon;
 Truth falls like May-bloom from the boughs,
 And love is dead too soon!

You said, though other lips should smile,
 'T would be in vain for you—
 That ravest charms could never beguile
 A heart so firm and true.
 But now my tears, like falling rain,
 Blot out the drying day,
 And you will never come again
 To kiss my tears away!

—Shirley Wynne.

IT WAS HER DARN.

One of Those Things Which a Woman Never Forgets.

I must tell you something that happened only in a country town where dishonesty in the educated classes is not so safe as it is in cities. A girl I knew was one day ransacking an old dowry chest and found among other things long laid by an old-fashioned white lace veil. It was about a yard and one-quarter in length and was quite a yard wide. The design was heavy and rich along the edge, and the rest was "sprigged" with small orange buds. It had been the wedding veil of some ancestress. The lace was beautifully fine old Brussels, and of course, was valuable. The girl was so delighted to find it, rolled up among a lot of old linen, that she impudently dragged it out of the chest, and in doing so caught one corner of it on a wretched nail that lurked unseen inside the big box. However, she darned it so skillfully that it hardly showed, and she used to wear this veil as a fitch, and lovely it looked.

One very hot day, at a garden party, she left it in the bedroom of her hostess, and, coming up to get it in the evening, could not find it anywhere. It had disappeared, and, though she was very sorry just at first, she soon forgot all about it, as girls will. She married and went to India with her husband. Her mother left the village. But last year, when my old friend was home with her husband on furlough, they met some old acquaintances who had a place near their former home, and, being asked to go and stay with them, they accepted. On the very evening of their arrival there was an amateur concert got up by the musical people about, and, of course, every one went, Jeanie and her husband among the rest. They sat immediately behind a girl whom Jeanie had known formerly, and whom she recognized with pleasure, only waiting for a pause in the performance to attract her attention. This, however, she did very effectually before any pause came.

In a very piano part of the solo that was being sung, a loud whisper rang quite audibly through the room. This was Jeanie, who had found her long lost veil, recognized her own dainty little stitches, and uttered aloud, "My darn!" The girl before her turned round, as did every one, and when she saw Jeanie she grew as white as the lace itself. You see, she had thought herself quite safe in wearing it after that long time, thinking Jeanie was in India. What must she have felt when she turned round and saw her sitting beside her! The veil was restored next day, and some plausible explanation given which Jeanie feigned to believe satisfactory. A woman may forget her own child—women often do; but what woman could forget her own darn!

Cable Roads in England.

While stopping in St. Louis, information has reached me of the failure of a London joint stock company in which I hold a great deal of stock. It was founded for the purpose of laying cable roads for street trams (railways I see they are called here), and accepting payment largely in preference stock of the companies owning the franchise. After three years' patient waiting and hoping the affair has collapsed, simply because no company could be induced to treat with us or lay a cable. The only line in the whole of Great Britain is less than a mile long, and as it runs up a steep hill, people have got to call the cable plan the "steep grade system."

What surprises me most about this is that the idea of traction by means of an endless rope certainly originated in England. There nearly all collieries and iron mines are on hills, and the produce is brought down into the valleys to railroad tracks, canals and harbors, by means of primitive cable roads, the loaded wagons drawing the empty ones up, and the speed being regulated by a powerful drum brake at the summit. This saves all expense of machinery or horse-power, as there is almost always an incline right from the pit shaft. The first case on record of passenger or goods traffic by means of a cable was on the London and Blackwall railroad, which was worked by a stationary engine and ropes for some years. It was a very primitive system, and the grip idea hadn't been evolved. It was in every way inferior to locomotive traction, to which it gave place just as soon as sufficient capital could be raised to provide the plant.—Englishman in Globe-Democrat.

A Sweet Poy.

Take two moss rosebuds, half open, a spray of rosemary, and a half dozen of the flower heads of lavender, to which add a cluster or two of mignonette, three old clove carnations, a small bunch of white jasmine, and a few leaves of the sweet-scented verbena (Aloysia citrodora). If to the above you add a half opened old Provence or cabbage rose, so much the better, and the result will be a sweet poy that a duchess might like to have near her, and which, if tastefully put together, will delight the eyes as well as the nose. This sort of sweet poy was far more common in the days of our great grandmothers than now.

You must not for a moment fancy that the above recipe for a sweet poy is a bit of literary labor out of my own head, so to say. The truth is, I found it written inside the cover of an old herbal, and to-day I tested its efficiency, and having found it not wanting, I offer it to every Lady Corisande who reads The Garden.—Cor. The Garden.

A Gift to Science.

It is proposed to make the Lick observatory truly a gift to science as well as to California by placing the great telescope at the disposal of the distinguished astronomers of the world during certain hours of each twenty-four, thus giving visiting specialists an opportunity of attacking the unsolved problem of astronomy with the most powerful optical aid to be obtained.—Arkansas Traveler.

SKIN DISEASES
 Are of two kinds; firstly, those which are only skin deep (which are not to be considered) secondly, those which are caused by a bad state of blood, and which attacks various parts of the body in different ways. Skin disease shows itself in the HEAD, sometime in the form of dandruff which no amount of brushing and combing will get rid of, and sometimes in the form of Scaly Eruptions. In the NECK, by an enlargement of the glands, commonly called Glandular Swellings, which, if unchecked become very unsightly wounds. In the ARMPITS, and the inside of the ELBOWS, by an inflamed Roughness of the skin, which is very painful when washed. In the HANDS, by deep cracks or fissures, which, if healed for a few days, speedily open again, or by horny-looking patches. In the LEGS by hard, shiny and inflamed Swellings, or by wounds more or less deep. And on the BODY, in Red Scaly Patches, which as often robbed off, form again, or in the discharge of a thin, watery fluid of a very disagreeable nature. In all these cases the treatment must be two-fold. An Ointment is required to relieve Itching, and Medicine must be taken to change the state of the Blood, and render it pure. Both these requirements are supplied by
DR. ROBERT'S CELEBRATED MEDICINE.
 The OINTMENT called
"THE POOR MAN'S FRIEND"
 And the
ALTERATIVE PILLS,
 Called "PILULE ANTISCROFULÆ."
 These Two Medicines have now stood the test of 100 years' trial, having been introduced to the public in the latter part of the last century. They may be obtained from Chemists, or of the proprietors.
