ALLEN G. THURMAN.

SKETCH OF THE OLD ROMAN BY ONE WHO KNOWS HIM WELL.

His Delightful Home Life—His Love for His Grandchildren—His Popularity With Friends and Neighbors—His Fine Library One of the Best in Ohio.

[Special Correspondence.] COLUMBUS, O., Feb. 14.

Allen G. Thurman is the head of one of the happiest homes in the land, where he has more delight in romps with his playful grandchildren than he ever had in his contests with Morton, Conkling, Edmunds, Sherman and other leading opponents in the senate. As a lawyer, jurist and statesman, Thurman has viewed the world from summits, but like other leading Americans, he has been repeatedly disappointed in the only promotion that could be given him—the presidency. While he made his national reputation in the senate, he is best known in his own state as an eminent lawyer and jurist. With Judge Thurman's political career my readers are already familiar. It was while he was the Democratic leader in the senate that he became generally known as the Old Roman. His friends and neighbors call him the "Noblest Roman of them all." He always carries a red handkerchief and uses snuff. His red bandana has become the emblem of the Mossbacks in Ohio, so much so that they go to the national and other conventions with "red bandanas" in their pockets as their only badge.

When he returned from Washington he found his old home encompassed by business places and a large winter beer hall across the street. The orchestra music and the applause did not conduce to quietude, and he built a fine mansion on East Rich street, in which both himself and his son, A. W. Thurman, now live. Their offices adjoin each other, too, in the old homestead building up town, known as the Thurman house. The judge comes up to his office every day in the summer, and nearly every day during the winter. When the weather is bad, Mr. C. A. Malloy, his private secretary, takes the mail out to the house. The judge is actively engaged in some celebrated cases, notably the government suit against the Bell Telephone company and the large Wisconsin land suits. The other day he argued a case at Chillicothe. He is not solicitous for clients, but he expresses the desire always to have cases pending and to be at work.

The Thurman library is one of the finest in the state. The judge collected many rare books in his European tours and he has some of the most valuable volumes extant—some volumes that are rare for the richness of the royal issues and others that are out of print and very valuable. He is a general reader of literature and history. He still keeps informed daily of the Congressional Record's contents and he has recently completed three readings of the Bible in three languages, French, Latin and English, preferring the Latin version. While not a churchman, he is a close student of theology. Recently he has read, for the second time, the books of Henry George, but finds much more in them to condemn than to indorse.

THE OLD ROMAN AND HIS GRANDSON. (Used by permission of J. M. Elliott, Photographer.)

While a great lover of books, Judge Thurman is also a man of very great general information and business capacity. He finds time to act as director of a bank, an insurance company, and some other enterprises. At one time he stood at the top of the taxpayers' list in Columbus, but a hole in public life others passed him. He is a poorer man for his public service rather than a richer one, and against his integrity even his most bitter opponents never breathed a suspicion. At his residence and office he is called on by lawyers and politicians daily for advice. Bills pending in the legislature and congress are now submitted to him. He has required the services of an additional private secretary much of the time to answer office seekers and write thousands of recommendations to the Cleveland Administration.

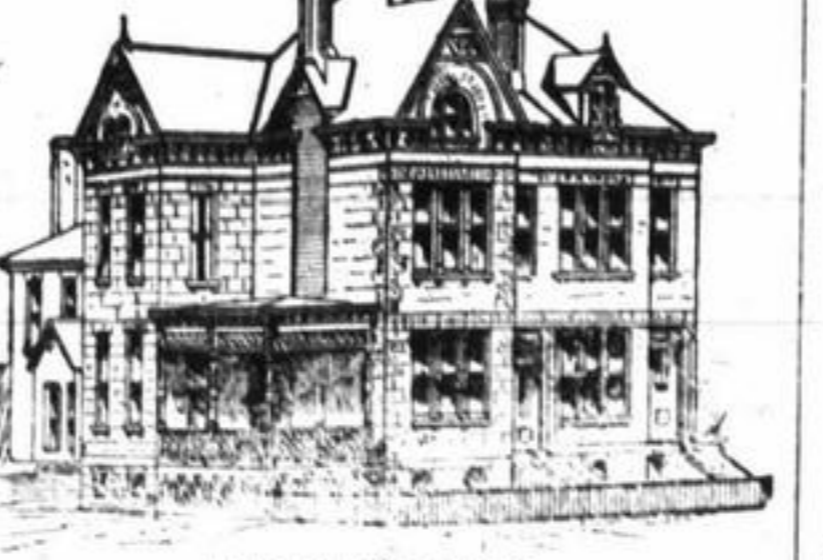

Few prominent Democrats ever come to the city without calling at his home, the mecca of Jeffersonianism in Ohio. It is a favorite place of gathering at nights of members of the legislature and others, as the judge is a very interesting conversationalist, fond of a good game and social life. After entertaining a party he will invariably read till 3 a.m., and be up before noon reading the morning papers.

While kept from his library much by callers, there is one class that never intrudes—the children. His son's six children find Grandpa Thurman their most familiar playmate. His favorite grandson is Daniel Caldwell Thurman, named after the manager of the Nickel Plate, formerly of the Pan Handle, and a favorite with the Thurman household. The cut here given represents Dan as he can be found any day absorbing the entire attention of the retired statesman. Little Dan always comes over to eat breakfast with his grandfather and the old man goes to him if the little fellow happens to be sick. On Sunday morning Mrs. Thurman has what she calls a "waffle breakfast," when all of the six grandchildren come over to eat breakfast with grandpa.

On a summer's evening the children of the neighborhood congregate on the Thurman lawn where the stout, silver haired old Roman has often been seen with as many as thirty or forty children playing all sorts of pranks. He is passionately fond of them and always has Dan along as boss of the playground. Like his political competitor, ex-President Hayes, he breeds in breeding poultry. He has the best assortment of chickens in the city and takes good care of them. Mrs. Thurman is afraid to ride out and the judge suits her tastes. They usually walk wherever they go, and resemble a young couple in a notion more than old folks who have traveled together for half a century. As husband and wife, father and mother, neighbors and friends, both are models. They go to all the funerals of neighbors and old friends, and are attentive to the poor. They are both very popular with the masses. Mrs. Thurman is a native of Kentucky, and they were married in November, 1844. Mrs. Thurman's name was Mary Anderson Dun, and she is one year older than her distinguished husband. Although respectively 74 and 75 years of age, it is always "Mary" and "Allen" with them. They love to look around the city of their home, and the judge is often seen walking among the masses or sitting in the saddle shop under his office interviewing the farmers, mechanics and others.

At home he sits most in a large old fashioned chair used by his father and tells of the changes of the times. By the way, he has done much himself to make these changes, in putting up the buildings, and is himself quite an architectural critic. While he is troubled somewhat with rheumatism, he has no dyspepsia or gout, the prevailing troubles of Washington residents—and he was in public life for twenty-five years. He never loses his temper. When called on by politicians on matters of no interest any way to him he always listens attentively, and is animated and earnest in all he does. He is a large man, vigorous and robust, while Mrs. Thurman is small and wiry. The judge is a great smoker, averaging a dozen strong cigars each day, and the old Virginia hospitality is the order of the day at the Thurman home every day. If the judge has a distinguishing quality higher than that of his comprehensive powers of argument it is that of memory. He remembers everything in his wonderful experience, and in reading the papers recalls meeting men whose names he sees at this or that place and the circumstances connected therewith. I. D. J.

COMMENTS ON CURRENT TOPICS.

The Craze for Tall Towers that Has Seized European Nations.

A craze for tall towers has been developed in Europe. It was first suggested by the French, who have under way an iron tower 1,000 feet high, which is to be ready in time for the great international exhibition in 1889. But the Belgians are going to have an exhibition in Brussels in 1888, and they propose to put up a wooden tower of the same height. This has created some consternation in Paris, for it will make their great iron structure seem a negative copy of the Belgian shaft. As designed, the French structure will be one of the marvels of the world. Now comes the news that the English people have "caught on" to the tower idea, and contemplate erecting a stone edifice, height not yet determined, to commemorate Queen Victoria's jubilee, the anniversary of the fiftieth year of her reign. It is now in order for some Yankee to propose a tower that will outvie that of Babylon, 2,000 feet high at least. Some years back a daring architect proposed an exhibition building in New York, that would support a dome so high that it would dominate the country round and could be seen at Washington from the south and Boston from the northeast, but nothing ever came of the proposition. This would be a good time to revive it.

Appropos of the queen's jubilee, there has been developed in England a feeling of actual hostility to her person and throne. At several recent radical meetings every mention of the queen's name was hissed, and when the national anthem was performed the groans and signs of disapproval fairly drowned the music. A noted Englishman writer publishes the following and suggests an entirely new way of commemorating the queen's jubilee. In a document widely circulated in Great Britain, but not at all in this country as yet, she says:

Among the many reasons why we should celebrate the interesting fact that we have been the subjects of one particular woman for half a century the following have not so far as I know, been suggested. They are facts which deserve the attention of every worker but it may perhaps be thought doubtful whether they will stimulate the "loyalty" of the masses.

EXP. culture in 1856 £30,500,000
EXP. culture in 1886 32,500,000
Cost of army in 1856 92,000,000
Cost of army in 1886 18,000,000
Cost of navy in 1856 4,000,000
Cost of navy in 1886 12,900,000
Poor rate in 1856 28,140,000
Poor rate in 1886 18,800,000
Poor rate in England and Wales 6,210,710
Poor rate in Scotland and Wales 1,550,000

If we are asked how in view of the above results of the fifty years' reign, we should commemorate the queen's jubilee, the best answer which I suggest is—By abolishing the monarchy. ASSIE BRESAULT. D. G. CROLY.

Few Think.

Of the wonderful processes constantly being conducted within the human body, and all are prone to forget that new blood must be supplied to replace the effete and disintegrating atoms, which, if allowed to remain within the body, do so at the peril of health if not of life itself. Nature sometimes fails to eliminate as rapidly as necessary the waste material of the organism, and it is then that Hamilton's Pills of Mandrake and Bitternut prove of the greatest value. They speedily harmonize every irregularity of action and restore, as if by magic, the wanted measure of health and strength. Hamilton's Pills are entirely vegetable in composition, and are safe to employ under the circumstances. Sold by druggists and dealers in medicine.

Advice to Mothers.

Mrs Winslow's Soothing Syrup should always be used when children are cutting teeth. It relieves the little sufferer at once; it produces natural, quiet sleep by relieving the child from pain, and the little cherub awakes as "bright as a button." It is very pleasant to the taste. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, relieves wind, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for diarrhoea, whether arising from teething or other causes. Twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup, and take no other kind.

Lame back and nervous debility, associated with rheumatism, is sometimes met with in every day life, but as a rule we find not more than two of these complaints in the same party. Be this as it may. The only sure and perfect cure is electricity and the best form of administering it is by Norman's electric belts and insoles. W. J. Wilson is my agent and from him you can procure testimonials and circulars relating to any of your complaints. Try and be cured. W. J. Wilson, sole agent for Kingston.
