Visiting the Committee Rooms.

Mr. Gunn visited the Gladstone club rooms at 7 o'clock. The members of the different committees were busily at work comparing notes. On entering the room the people's candidate was greeted with three hearty cheers. He shook each man warmly by the hand, and spoke kindly and in a gentlemanly way to them. Although fatigued by his long journey he was in the best of humor, and said cheering words to all. The reform rooms next to N. K. Scott's store was then visited. This room was packed with electors and as soon as Mr. Gunn appeared, a voter shouted, "Here's our Gunn," and prolonged and deafening cheer ing followed. He shook the hand of each man present and retired. Mr. Eilbeck being called in made a strong address in which he stated that he was sure that those present, judging from their bright faces. were crammed full of enthusiasm in behalf of Mr. Gunn, and he hoped they would keep that way until they defeated the king of boodlers. He was lustily cheered when he had concluded.

ARRIVAL OF ALEX. GUNN

GREETED BY THOUSANDS-TRIUM-PHAL ENTRY OF THE CITY.

Welcome to One of Kingston's Most Loyal Sons - No Such Political Procession Ever Before Seen Here-Mr. Gunn had no Reluctance in Answering to the Teople's Call.

ALEXANDER GUNN. Did you hear the report of our Gunn Well, it went off with a bang sufficiently loud to be heard by Sir John even in Guelph, and telling him that the piece of artillery, about which he was so anxious, had reached the city, and that his doom was Kingston was on his yesterday afternoon. One of her most estimable citizens had returned to his native heath, and his arrival of persons. At 4 o'clock Alexander Gunn. the people's candidate, stepped off the cars. He lit on both feet, and there went up a cheer that will not cease to echo and re-echo about the city until he is landed right in parliament by the united efforts of a couple of thousands of hones; Kingstonians, An enthusiast broke into poetry, and his par siy on a familiar stanza ran :

"But a brighter day dawned o'er Kingston's

When the lovers met, never to pur ; And Gunn gave her a token,

Free, warm, and unbroken. The gift of his own gallant heart!

Never, in the history of Kingston, was there such a political procession as that which passed through the city streets. It stretched i'self for two miles, not in broken lengths, but in one solid line, and it was made up of honest, honorable citizens, young and old. By the way the conservative organ sneered at the pageant, claiming it was made up largely of boys. We hope all the young men and there were dozens of them -will resent the intended insult and had no anticipation of parliament dissolving the polls. There's the place to show that it is not a crime to be a young man. The greeting to Mr. Gunn was an impromptu affair, one suggested and carried out in less than a day, and, consequently. one that did credit to Kingston and its citizens. It was not a purely party affair, for many men of conservative principles greeted the returning citizen in a manner that did them infinite honor. The programme laid down was to assemble at the city hall at 3:30 o'clock, and the citizens did come from all points; on foot, in cutters, in hacks, in luxuriant rigs, in carioles, in coal and carters' sleighs, in farm sleighs, on Shedden company's trucks, and in all manner of conveyances. As promptly as possible the procession was got into order, and moved for the G.T.R. station, headed by the 14th P.W.O. rifles band, and followed by a Shedden truck bearing upon it a half hundred lusty students. Then the cavalcade came and what a sight! Four in hands. doubles, singles, and tandems. Many banners fluttered in the breeze, while nearly every horse was adorned by little union jacks, or flowers attached to the harness. The parade proceeded to the outer station by way of Grove street, and all along the line there was a scrambling of people to see what was going on. Engines tooted, and then there was terribe cheering. Mr. J. Pailoway acted as marshall of the day and did his part nobly. He handled the gigantic affair with the skill of a veteran.

THE SCENE AT THE DEPOT. The Grand Trunk railway yard was filled, and the road half a mile from it with sleighs. Soon the train came thundering along. Five hundred men crowded upon the platform and sent up a cheer that made the passen gers wonder what they had run into. In a moment plain Sandy Gunn, wearing a stiff felt hat and the popular overcoat with hood, stepped off the train, accompanied by Messrs, Samuel Harper and J. Stewart. He has n't time to draw his breath before. amid an outburst of enthusiasm, he was hoisted upon the shoulders of stalwart men and carried through the surging crowd. For a time he was overcome with emotion, but regaining his composure, he acknowledged the great honor done him and greeted heartily all classes of vitizens on all sides of him. He expressed amazement at the magnitude of his reception. But he hadn't begun to see it at the station. The band was whooping up "See the Conquering Hero Comes" when he was planted in a carriage drawn by four of Wilson's white Arabians. Mr. W. R. McRae, president of the reform association, Mayor Carson, Dr. Phelan, C Livingston, jr., and James Stewart, occupied the carriage with him. And then the triumphal entry was made into the city. The demonstration was a mighty one, and the cheers as his carriage swept out of the station grounds were louder than the music of the band. Lining both sides of the roadway as far as eye could reach were carriages crowded with liberals and conservatives, who honored the citizen by removing their hats and cheering with a will. Just for a moment there was a lulk and it gave the host a chance to see the candidate. He was tired, yet full of life. His white whiskers and still whiter hair gave him a venerable appearance. Sandy Gunn was indeed a happy man as he greeted the populace. Soon the people demanded a bet ter look at him, and, hoisted high in the sleigh, he bowed his greetings to the thousands of spectators. Every elector touched his hat, and hundreds, on the trip up from the depot, rushed to the sleigh and grasped him by the hand. Women waved their handkerchiefs, their aprons and their brooms. Victory was in the air this time and no mistake about it. ENTHUSIASM BY THE WAY.

As the heart of the city was reached the enthusiasm became more marked. Old ladies cheered, young women cheered, and children ran delightedly along the streets, waking the echoes with their shouts. The procession vecred off Montreal street, went down Bay street and passed along Bagot to Barrack, down Wellington to Princess, and down Princess to King. The block was circled and the triumphal tarnout passed up Princess again. The leading thoroughfares were packed with people. Not since the visit of the Marquis of Lorne and Princess Louise , had there been such a turnout of citizens. Handsomely dressed ladies crowded out into the middle of the street to greet Sandy, to smile upon him, to wave their kerchiefs at him, and bid him welcome to his home. He did, indeed receive a "cead mille failthe" from the people of his native place. The air was rent with cheers and sad visaged conservatives pulled down their hats and struggled hard to get away from the enthusiastic crowd. As the bowling alley was passed the portrait of Sir John seemed to have taken on a very sour look. All the way along Princess street the cheering combined. Every liberal's face bore a smile. Down Gordon street to Union the cavalcade went, then turned up to Earl and with an outburst of unbounded applause the citizens waved their hats and strained their throats as the "old war horse, Mr. John Carruthers, appeared at' a window of his residence and clapped his hands at the procession and cheering as it went by At 5 o'clock a halt was made and the 1,500 occupants of the 235 conveyances bounced out and made for Ontario hall whither Mr. Gunn had been conveyed by his enthusiastic admirers.

GREETED BY THE PROPER. The crowd surged about the platform to personally welcome "a decent and good citizen" back to Kingston. Mr. Gunn speedily stepped upon the floor, and for half an hour held a sort of levee, shaking hands with every one he could reach in the building. A half dozen times cheers went up for the candidate. The company was in merry mood, chatted pleasantly about the magnitude of the impromptu demonstration of its augury of a victory for Gunn. Finally Mr. C. F. Gildersleeve stepped to the front, and, beneath union jacks, addressed the audience welcoming on behalf of the citizens, Mr. Alexander Gunn, to their midst. He was was announced by the cheering of thousands | welcomed as an estimable citizen and a good friend, and he was especially welcomed on the eve of battle, at a time when a gr gantie struggle was going on between right and evil. They wanted such men as Mr. Gunn to aid in purifying parliament of the corruption which infested it. He asked earnest men to exert all the power they possessed in order to attain the desired end, the return of Mr. Gunn. He urged them to be | present at the meeting on Saturday night, and to so act that on Tuesday evening the majority would be on the reform side. The speaker was frequently interrupted by cheers. and as he exclaimed: "I now welcome Alexander Gunn to our midst again, and slapped him on the back the audience sent up a tremendous cheer.

Mr. Gunn thanked the citizens a thou sand times for their reception. He took it as a manifestation of their warm friendship for him, and as such he could not find words to sufficiently express his gratitude. When Paragraphs of Interest as Picked Up to he received the call to come to Kingston he was 5,000 miles away, but though he had he dropped everything and delayed not a minute in his voyage homeward. He had crossed seas and continents as fast as steam could carry him. "I had no reluctance," he remarked and great enthusiasm, "in responding to your call. You gave me your confidence in 1878, you repeated it in 1882, and I have every hope that you will renew it in 188 . He said he had tried to deserve the confidence of Kingstomans. He had tried all he could to secure legislation that would benefit the city. He had endeavored to have the locomotive works, for instance, as much protected as other industries so that it could be kept running all the year round. so that it might become a school for the young men of Kingston, who were as intelligent as any in the world, a school in which they could learn the highest mechanics, and, instead of leaving the city, command the highest wages right at their homes. But no relief could be secured. The day was dawning, however, when he hoped to see a good government returned to power, and then Kingston would get the justice she deserved. With Edward Blake at the head of affairs all would be fairly dealt with, and honest government would be established once more. He felt weary after his long journey, but he was glad to be home again, and gladder even at the reception that had been accorded him. It was of such a warm character that he would never forget it. He asked his friends to stand by him and aid in his teturn. He was vigorously cheered as he concluded.

A miner, who was afew feet away. heard the crash, and seeing the lights extinguished gave the alarm, and speedily the earth was removed and the victims carried tenderly to their homes or boarding houses. William Carver, Julius Bagot and John Brenton were married men, with families; Gunn and McCormick were single men. It is only a short time since Robert Richard son was injured by the falling rocks. The following complete and authentic account of the accident was received this morning: .. sad accident occurred at the Wilbur mines at half-past one o'clock, Thursday morning, by which five men were instantly killed. The accident was caused by a fall of ground from the roof. It had been thoroughly examined by the captain last week, and pronounced secure, but owing to the change in the weather, the water sinking from the surface, must have bosened the earth and precipitated the underlying scale to the bottom of the mine, instantly burying and crushing to death all the hands working round the skip car. 'The alarm was immediately given, and the captain with a force of men proceeded to remove the bodies. The scene, in dead of night, was harrowing beyond description, and the different homes were aroused from their peaceful slumbers to receive the mangled remains of the dead

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

The Game of the Tories.

KINGSTON, Feb. 17.—(To the Editor): As a fair-minded conservative, and one who intends to vote for Mr. Gunn next Tuesday, I think, it fair to warn the liberals and sup porters of Mr. Gunn to be on their guard against the tactics of those opposed to them.

Let the best and most intelligent of Mr. Gunn's friends be appointed scrutineers at each polling sub-division in the city, and watch that the ballot given by the deputy returning officer to each voter be the same when marked as that which was handed to him when he went into the compartment to mark it. The game is to have some printed ballots, and to mark them for Sir John, and, if not detected, carry out those initialled by the deputy-returning officer, mark the ones brought out and make the men bribed, or intimidated, bring out blank ones and so keep the game rolling all day. Another game is to send a man in to vote who will say that he does not understand the English language further than to give his name, and have sent in an interpreter with him. Keep the interpreter out. This game was worked against Mr. Whiting to his great disadvantage.

Let the liberals look out, and they will oon discover where liquor is being kept to ive voters in order to influence them. This was also done in the Metcalfe election. Already liquor has been sent by a large dealer on Princess street and used in a committee room in Cataraqui ward, and the names of those to whom it was given, and those who supplied it, have been furnished to one of Mr. Gunn's friends.

Now that these facts are given no excuscan be offered if care and vigilance is not exercised. The returning officer, Dr. Henderson, will, no doubt, give particular in structions about the ballots and the marking of them, but other ballots will be furnished to men outside of the deputy returning offi cers by those who should know better.

Let the election be a fair one and Mr. Gunn will win it. Sir John is necessary in the house at Ottawa, but let him represent the city in which he lives, or for which he has done the most. Does it not appear strange to conservatives like myself that he does not run for Ottawa where he is best known and which he boasts he has done so much for ?

I vote for Mr. Gunn as one whom I have known for many years, who is largely iden tified with the city's interests, who has done very much by his means and ability to ad vance them. He is a good man, a christian man, and one who is an example to our young men and boys of what they can attain to by following his example. Therefore, all conservatives who, like myself, (and there are many), should be independent of party ties on this occasion and assist to increas-Mr. Gunn's majority on the 22nd. -A Lit. FRAL CONSERVATIVE.

He's a Modest Man.

KINGSTON, Feb. 18. (To the Editor) Mr. R. T. Walkem is passing as an independent conservative, and an elector who never asked a favor of the government. His family, however, has fared very well. His father, "Col." Walkem, for years had a soft place in one of the Ottawa departments : his elder brother is a judge in British Columbia; and his younger brothers and father in-law have been ready for any pick ings, election and otherwise, that are going. Col. Dennison, in West Toronto, demands election to parliament because he comes of family 100 years old, only two members of which have been settled in public offices. Mr. Walkem can go one better than Col. Dennison. His family is very ancient in its origin, and the government has been very good to it. The independence of the Q.C. is unquestionable. - LIMB OF THE LAW
