PREACHERS ON PURITY.

REV. PRIN. GRANT AND REV. S. G. BLAND MAKE ADDRESSES.

What They Think of Party Politics-The Utopian Future to Which they Look-Voters Urged to be Honest and Upright and Have Members of Parliament the

It having been ann nunced in the city churches that a public meeting, at which there would be discussed the subject, "Morality and immorality of electors, or the present duty of the citizens," would be held in the city hall last evening a very large audience assembled. At 8:30 Rev. Dr. Jackson took the chair, and after singing and prayer he stated that at the present time there rest ed upon the people an important duty, one which should be discharged in a christian spirit. It would be the aim of the speakers to urge upon the electors, as far as possible, to exert a moral and christian influence during the elections. This counsel had been neglected in the past. This world belonged to Christ and he required his followers to act as christians in their relations to the

THE FIRST SPEAKER.

Rev. S. G. Bland had yet to meet one good man who was satisfied with the pre sent state of party politics. A very brief enquiry into the facts showed that there was mere truth than poetry in the remarks of a citizen, "That Kingston was a rotten constituency, that in the pot of seething politics there were some ingredients that did not come from above." This was the opinion of reformers and conservatives, protest ants and catholics. Against whom should this charge of discontent be directed? Some say against the parties, others against the candidates. He thought that the representatives in parliament were just as good as the electorate. There were good, bad and indifferent men in parliament, and there were good, bad and indifferent men in the electorate. They were required by God to lift up the standard of righteousness in politics. He would like to say something that would hurt their feelings, for there were some men in the city whose feelings should be hurt. He then referred to those who would not vote on election day because they were not driven to the polls, because the candidates did not speak to or shake hands with them, and flatter them and fawn upon them. Such men should be designated as overgrown babies and driven to the polls in perambulators. The party spirit of the age was denounced. There were some men who will not change their views because they belong to a party, or because their fathers belouged to it. Party spirit was the fruitful mother of corruption, and the cause of the groundless statements put forth as truths. The vast power of the press was touched upon, and the charge made that that power was sometimes used in pandering to a depraved party spirit. He thought no paper SHOULD SACRIFICE ITS INDEPENDENCE.

Then there were the men who had axes to grind, who wanted favors at the hands of the government. How much higher are such men then the man who take $5 and $10 each for their votes. The system of giving government patronage to supporters was bribery on a huge scale. Everything desired by the government should be tendered for. It had been said that there were 500 votes to be decided by the amount of money paid for them. Men on one side had contended that money must be spent during the election because their opponents were going to bribe. He was glad that the lead ers of both parties had declared that they would discontinue bribery on election day If any party was going to be left he hoped it would be the party who desired to do the voting late in the day. The privilege of exercising the franchise was an inestimable one and the man who sold his vote shared the same shame as the women who sold her honor. The men who gave bribes for votes were more guilty then the men who receiv ed them. The former were in the most cases intelligent men, holding high social positions and when they countenanced bribery it was no wonder the poor ignorant voters were in favor of it. In conclusion the speaker hoped that the day of bribery had gone by. Other nations had gone down on account of their corruption, and if Canada was not carefully governed it, too, would sink. Men were wanted to take part in politics who would be guided by the prin ciples of righteousness, and make their in fluence felt for good. Young men should not be bound by party methods, but should take an active interest in the welfare of the country. They might follow a party, but not bind themselves to support it for ever and under all circumstances. SPEECH OF DR. GRANT.

Principal Grant then followed and apoke for nearly an hour. He was happy to preach a sermon that suited the times. When the preachers spoke to men of duty and presented that duty in the light of the eternal truth they were doing a part for the salvation of their souls. For his part he had never been, and never could be, a party man in the popular sense of the term. He wanted to be free, to vote for this measure or for that as he thought right, and vote for this man or that man as he thought fit. He had voted for one side on one occasion, and another side at another time, and sometimes he did not vote at all. He had to act in this way because of the party system, which was bad in itself, and out of which he thought they would drift by and bye. Reference was made to the constitution of Canada, which requires that members shall go to parliament unpledged in order to secure government by parliament, instead of which they had

GOVERNMENT BY PARTY. He divided his remarks into sections. (1) Every person owed a duty to the country : (2) How were they to perform that duty ! Almost all men at a certain age had votes. The country was handed over to them and they could make or mar it, they could honour or dishonour it as they liked. How should they discharge their duty properly ! Never had a people such chances as the Canadians. They had a country without burdens and the sores and cankers which afflicted ancient civilization. They had a country with great territory and resources. Why, then, with such an inheritance that their fathers had bought with their blood, and with all the material conditions surrounding them, should they not have institutions, laws and usages that would be a pattern to the nations of the earth ! It was, therefore, the duty of each one to take an intelligent interest in the country's affairs, to make themselves acquainted with them as much as possible. Full information, however, could not be had of the country's affairs because of the party system. Party organs did not give it. It was, therefore, indispensable that a free country should have a press

RESPONSIBLE TO THE PUBLIC, and not to the party. It was of paramount importance to the healthy condition of the country to have a press that would scorn to take patronage from any government, that would scorn to take the wages of lying. Men should not judge parties or candidates by what they read in party papers about them, for such information was not reliable. He would not hang a mouse on the verdict of a party organ if the mouse was on the other side. The mouse might be guilty and it might not. They should give the prisoner the benefit of the doubt. He hoped that the people would, in the future, have an independent press, one that would give a full and impartial account of the affairs of the country. When that time arrived the electors would be in a position to decide the issue for themselves. Papers were needed that would tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, give fair reports of public meetings, and fair reports of the speeches of opponents, in parliament and out of it. He urged men to give free, independent, and unbiassed votes. He denounced bribery, and hoped that it would not be encouraged. Men should not refrain from voting because the candidates did not ask them to vote. If a candidate asked him for a vote he would be insulted. He loathed the practice of candidates in having to visit their houses and kiss their babies. Voters should not wait to be DRIVEN TO THE POLLS in cabs, but should go voluntarily. He would not think of going to the polls in a cab. He thanked God, from the bottom of his heart, when he read what had been done by the party leaders with reference to bribery. It shewed him that protests made in the past against bribery and cor ruption had not been made in vain. This proceeding of the political leaders would have a telling effect, not only in this but in future elections; it will be heard in every constituency in the land, and the day will come when there will be no back stair lobbying or intriguing with bishops and arch bishops. Elections will then be carried on honorably Let Kingston, he added, be lifted up and made the moral capitol of Canada. In conclusion he urged the people to encourage honest, intelligent and good men, warm hearted and true living men, to take an interest in politics.
