Curious Facts About Rabbits That Few People Except Old Hunters Understand-How a Gray Rabbit Protected Her Young-The Luminous Glow Worm.

Decayed wood, and especially peat, has occasionally been observed to evolve a faint light, and even some flowers have been remarked to give out brilliant flashes of light during a warm summer's evening. This light, emitted without apparent heat, is termed phosphorescence, as the younger readers of this column may not know, and is produced by several distinct means.

MALE AND FEMALE GLOW WORM. Various animal substances become luminous before putrescence has begun, and especially the flesh of certain fish, of which the most remarkable are carp and sole. Herring, lobsters and crabs often emit a phosphorescent light. Most familiar of all phosphorescent objects to boys and girls is, however, the phosphorescence of living animals, such as the firefly and glow worm. The latter, represented in our cut, will be recognized as an old and familiar friend by many readers, The hundred-legged worm found in decayed poplar wood or under lime, bricks and pots in the garden emits flashes of light when irritated by a little water. It may be well to explain that the so called glow worm is not a worm, but a beetle.

Curious Facts About Rabbits. Few people besides old hunters understand the position of a rabbit's feet in running. Young sportsmen are astonished upon examining rabbit tracks for the first time to find, as they think, that they always run backward. The explanation of this unusual position of an animal's tracks is that as the rabbit springs the fore feet strikes the surface near each other, while the hind feet are spread apart and brought to the ground some distance in advance outside of them. As these strike, the fore feet, which have touched the surface but lightly, are lifted and the spring is again made with the hind legs

Though naturally timid and unresisting. the rabbit will fight to protect its young. / naturalist tells in Golden Days how a gray rabbit attacked a black snake which was holding one of her young in its coils. She fought by springing over the snake and striking back her hind legs, delivering her blows with such force, precision and rapidity that the snake was struck every time. As she passed the snake aimed at her with his fangs, but only scratched off a mouthful of hair now and then, and was getting the worst of it when the naturalist interfered.

Pole Leaping.

Pole leaping is not only a useful but a very enjoyable athletic exercise, and requires no apparatus except a pole of some tough, hard wood, not liable to snap, and adapted to the height and strength of the young gymnast and to the length of the leaps he is to undertake. Begin with a short pole and practice leaping without a run. Rest one end of the pole on the ground, holding it by both hands placed near each other a little above the head. Then spring up evenly on both feet, managing the arms so that the elbows are bent when the body passes the pole.

POLE LEAPING.

Push yourself forward as far as possible, leaning all your weight on the pole, and continue this practice, gradually increasing the distance of your leap.

For a horizontal leap with a run, stand at some distance from the space you wish to clear. Hold the pole with the right hand above your head, thumb upward, and with the left hand at the height of the thigh, thumb downward. Then start with a run, keeping the lower end of the pole in front of you. On reaching the edge of the ditch or space you wish to jump stick the end of the pole into the earth, and by a sudden and powerful spring raise the body, leaning the weight on the arms as you rise, making a on the balls of the feet on the other side, bending the knees to break the force of the descent. nearer the top must you grasp the pole, the W. J. Wilson, druggist. distance between your hands and the lower end of the pole being in fact the radius of a half circle, of which your feet, in leaping, describe the circumference. Low walls and fences may be jumped by means of the leaping pole. Here it becomes necessary to lift the feet high as you rise, so as to clear the wall, and as you descend bring the upper hand smartly down, so as to jerk the lower end of the leaping pole upward, that it may clear the wall.

Jenny Lind's Later Days.

I was speaking the other day with an elderly Swedish gentleman about the stories one hears in America of the sensation Jenny Lind created there in 1850-of how people still told of hearing her marvelous voice in the streets outside the halls and churches in which she sang. He had known her ever since childhood, and is an intimate friend of an old gentleman still living in Stockholm who was the tenor in the old operatic company she first belonged to away back in 1837, and who was once engaged to be married to her. He told me many curious things of her later life.

She is plain and white haired now, with a severe expression of countenance. She is very pious, and most of her talk is devoted to bemoaning the days when she was sinful enough to appear on the stage. She is intolerant toward young singers, sneering at their voices and their vocations alike, and rebukes any one who ventures to address her by the name of Jenny Lind-or even refer to the name. I was told of a case some years ago, when she was visiting here in London, when her host brought to her a young Swedish soprano who had won fame and respect in Europe and America, and was proud of this opportunity of paying homage to Jenny Lind. She made the mistake of alluding to this name, and was so cruelly snubbed in consequence that Mme. Goldschmidt was never again asked to that house.-London Cor. New York Times.

Pictures of Mrs. Cleveland.

Among the callers at the White House at the noonday reception on Thursday was a distinguished foreigner, . who brought with him one of the largest sized photographs of Mrs. Cleveland, representing her in a dinner dress of black silk, with corsage and front draperies of jetted net. This picture the visitor showed to Mrs. Cleveland, with the request that she write her autograph on the lower margin, as he wished to carry it across the ocean with him to present to the queen of Italy. When informed of his intention Mrs. Cleveland said she did not consider the photograph by any means the best; that her preference was for the one taken in a white dress, with scarf drapery of pearl beaded tulle extending from the left shoulder across the bosom to the right side at the waist line. The visitor said be would also procure a copy of that picture, and would then carry both of them abroad, one as representing to best advantage her handsome figure, the other her beautiful face. - Washington Capital.

Gambetta's Statue in Paris.

The statue of Gambetta in the Place de Caroussel is being proceeded with apace by M. Aube, the sculptor to whom the important work has been intrusted. The figure of the great tribune is, however, still unfinished, the head only, which bears a striking resemblance to the original, being completed. The whole of the figure intended to represent the genius of the nation inspiring the orator is well nigh done, and gives a good idea of the general effect of the monument.

Gambetta will be represented with his right hand pointing toward the frontier in an attitude of appeal to the children of France, beneath him being an officer with a broken sword in his hand and falling over a cannon. By the sides of the tribune are a workman, a sailor, and a figure representing a soldier of that territorial army which Gambetta summoned to arms to resist the Germans in 1870. -London Telegraph.

Collis Browne (late Army Medical Staff) to which he gave the name of CHLORODYNE, and which is admitted by the profession to be the most wonderful and valuable remedy ever discovered.

CHLORODYNE is the only palliative in Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Gout, Cancer, Toothache From Symnes & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Medical Itali, Simla, Jan. 5, 1880. To J. T. Davenport, Esq., 33 Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury, London, Dear Sir, -We embrace this opportunity of congratulating you upon the wide-spread reputation this justly esteemed medicine. Dr. J. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne, has earned for itself, not only in Hindostan, but all over the East. As a remedy of general utility we must question whether a better is imported into the country, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and judging from their soldiers is exciting great interest, especially | sale, we fancy that their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances "ad infinitum" of the extraordinary efficacy of Dr. Collis Browne a Chlorodyne in Diarrhosa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Cholera, Diarrheea, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of the opinion that the substitution of of any other than Collis Browne's is a DELIBERATE BREACH OF FAITH ON THE PART OF THE CHEMIST, TO PRESCRIBER AND PATIENT ALIER.

We are, Sir, faithfully yours, Symes & Co., Members of the Pharmacy Society of Great Britain. His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists. CAUTION-Vice Chancellor Sir Page Wood stated that Dr. J.
