A DAKOTA WINTER.

LOCATION, SCENERY AND ADVANTAGES OF JAMESTOWN.

Not a Hard Winter—Gen. Miles' Winter Campaign—Rubbing the Frost Out. Thawing a Frozen Man—The Coteaux. A Geological Puzzle.

[Special Correspondence.]
JAMESTOWN, D. T., March 18.
Nature gives signs of coming spring, and now that it is over we can say that the past has not been a severe winter. Thirty-eight degrees below zero is the coldest I have personally felt in Dakota, though the mercury went ten degrees lower in a few places.

Nevertheless, one who ventures any distance from the settlement is wrapped and muffled till he looks like a walking hog-head of wool and fur. But of all the local phenomena in midwinter, rather the strangest to me is the eccentric course of the sun. To see that brilliant luminary peep above the horizon in the southeast after 8 a. m., creep low along the southern sky and sink in the southwest soon after 4 p. m., cutting a mere crescent out of the firmament—a crescent but 20 degs. wide at noon—is, indeed, a strange sight to a visitor from latitude 39 degs. And yet it has a perceptible effect on the air; for the mercury always rises 5 or 10 degs. by 2 p. m., and even before sunrise there is a change, as the registering thermometer of the signal office marked 37 degs. below, as the coldest during the last night of '86, while at sunrise it stood at 34 degs.

It makes one shiver to hear the old soldiers tell of Gen. Miles' winter campaign. For weeks together his men marched, scouted and fought where the mercury never rose to 10 degrees above zero. More than once they broke trails up a mountain gulch where the snow was from two to ten feet deep, each man taking the lead by turns for a few minutes at a time. It was severe enough on the soldiers, but it was destruction to the Indians, as it is impossible for them to move fast in winter. They are thinly clad at the best, and their custom is to lie close in their "teepees" during the coldest weather; and at such times they are almost as stupid as hibernating animals. Their ponies are also poor and unshod. The soldiers on the other hand are warmly clad and well fed and their horses have some grain; so they can penetrate to the very doors of the "teepees" in tolerably fair fighting condition.

There has been no fighting in Dakota for several years, but there are occasional journeys of great hardship. In the terrible winter of 1879-80 Lieut. H. Liggett, with company K of the Fifth United States, made the march from Bismarck over to the Yellowstone valley and return, taking supplies to a post. Every night, when the tents were erected, he took his stand at the door and applied snow to every man's face and ears before allowing him to go near the fire. The men were all "rustlers," and picked for the business, yet they could not keep ears and noses from getting frosted in a day's ride. After getting into quarters once more the skin peeled off most of their faces, but no serious harm resulted. The striking fact is that ear or nose often freezes so suddenly that one does not know it; he is not conscious of painful cold for more than a minute, especially if there is no wind. When friends ride out together on a cold and calm day it is the polite thing for each to snow the other's nose and clap on a bunch of snow at the first sign of freezing. And after a ride, on entering a house, you will occasionally be surprised by a polite request from the host for you to stop in the hall and not go near the fire till he can rub the frost out of your nose!

The northern Indians have a system by which they can restore a man frozen almost solid, if there is still a good circulation in his vital organs. They first put him in a "teepee" without fire and but little warmer than the outer air, and rub his frozen members with snow, then with fur and then with bare hands till circulation is extended a little. Next he is taken into a slightly warmer place and the extremities kept cool with snow till he gains a little more, and lastly his frozen members are immersed in cold water while the sound part of him is warmed and cheered with food and drink. The philosophy of it is that the thawing must be brought on by the natural circulation, from within outwardly; and then the blood gets into each section as fast as it is restored. But if the surface thaws first, from external heat, the circulation cannot reach it at once; and in a surprisingly short time it is dead flesh. Many a man lost a leg, arm, ear or nose in the early days of ignorance who would now be restored sound and whole by the Indian method.

The coteaux of Dakota are certainly a curiosity in geology. Going west from this place, which is only 1,400 feet above tide and in the very lowest part of the trough of James river, one first rises to the general level of the prairie. Westward then the rise is very gradual to the eastern base of the coteaux, and then abrupt to its summit. Everywhere among these coteaux, and especially on the main one between here and the Missouri, the summit level drops suddenly to walled basins, sunken meadows, lakes and gray

A DAKOTA TRAMPER. valleys. At first view one would say: They are simply the remains of original Dakota; all was highland, the rest is washed away. But he would be wrong. The coteaux even more than the prairies show that they are the result of drift: the earth is a compact blue clay, and there are here the few boulders are on top of the hills, showing that they were brought here by ice. Let geologists furnish the explanation; the practical fact is that all the western part of this coteau has a singularly mild winter climate, and that thousands of horses and cattle live there on the dried and cured grass.

J. H. BEADLE
OLD FASHIONED ROSES.
They ain't no style about 'em,
And they're sorter pale and faded;
Yit the doorway here without 'em
Would be lonseomer, and shaded

With a good 'eal blacker shadder Than the mornin' glories makes,
And the sunshine would look sadder,
For their good, old fashioned sakes.
I like 'em 'cause they kind o' sorter make a feller like 'em;
And I tell you when you find a bunch out whur the sun can strike 'em,
It always sets me thinkin'—
O' the ones 'at used to grow and peek in through the chinkin'—
O' the cabin, don't you know.
And then I think o' mother.

And how she used to love 'em,
When they wuzn't any other,
Less they found 'em up above 'em!
And her eyes, afore she shut 'em,
Whispered with a smile, and said
We must pluck a bunch and put 'em
In her hand when she was dead.
But, as I wuz a sayin',
They ain't no style about 'em
Very gaudy or displayin'.
But I wouldn't be without 'em,
'Cause I'm happier in these posies
And the hollyhaws and sich
Than the hummin' bird 'at noses
In the roses of the rich.
—James Whitcomb Riley.

Everything Goes.
Young Housekeeper (timidly)—Isn't fourteen cents rather high for turkey? I am quite sure the price across the way is only thit-ten?
Butcher—With the feet on!
Young Housekeeper—N-no, I think the feet are cut off.
Butcher (with a superior smile)—I thought so. When we sell a turkey, ma'am, we sell it feet and all.—New York Sun.

The Blending of Life.
And death is one of the mysterious functions of the human organism. There are constantly battling two rival elements: the one throwing off waste and effete matter, death, the other to supply living atoms to build up and sustain, life. It is when the system grows sluggish, when the effete and dead particles are not eliminated and remain to clog life's channels, that Hamilton's Pills of Mandrake and Bitternut render greatest service. They cleanse the system, restore the liver to a healthy action, correct morbid secretions, renew the springs of life by making digestion more perfect, and proved by use the most perfect family medicine in existence. Accept no substitute for Hamilton's Pills of Mandrake and Bitternut. At druggists, and dealers in medicine.

Lame back and nervous debility, associated with rheumatism, is sometimes met with in every day life, but as a rule we find not more than two of these complaints in the same party. Be this as it may. The only sure and perfect cure is electricity and the best form of administering it is by Norman's electric belts and insoles. W. J. Wilson is my agent and from him you can procure testimonials and circulars relating to any of your complaints. Try and be cured. W. J. Wilson, sole agent for Kingston.

A Lucky Escape.
"For six years I suffered with my throat and enlarged tonsils. I was very weak; I doctored four years, and had advice from three doctors; they said I would have to undergo an operation. I tried B.B.B. instead. One bottle cured me." M. A. Squech, Raglan, Ont.
Shiloh's cough and consumption cure it sold by us on a guarantee. It cures consumption. W. J. Wilson, wholesale and retail agent, Kingston, Ont.
