Mr. Slaven, of Napanee, in some inexplicable way has discovered that "Kingston is asking the Ontario government for special legislation to enable them to borrow $100, 000 to build a branch of the N.T. & Q. RR. from Yarker to Kingston. He said it was contrary to the legislation of the government to put a municipality into debt. If the government did not see their way clear to legislate on the memorial they would no doubt grant aid in some other way." Kingston only desires to secure legislation to permut of the issue by it of debentures running over forty years, provided the citizens see their way clear to bonus the railroad. There will be no borrowing of money at all.

BENOIT-CONSTANT COQUELIN.

Speaking recently of the company at the Comedie-Francaise, Paris, Sarah Bernhardt said of them: "Together they make the most consummate body of artists in the world," expressing the general opinion in a few words. M. Coquelin was the most il lustrious of these distinguished players until a few months ago, when he withdrew from membership among them for the purpose of having a stage of his own. His purpose of coming to the United States flas been announced, and the question is, Will he suc ceed here with no adventitious advantages to support his art ? He plays only in French, and his success or failure will be regarded as indicative of the extent to which the people of this country really appreciate the French drama and the French stage. Regarded in this way M. Coquelin's proposed tour is an unusually interesting announce-

The life of the great actor presents few facts for recital. He was born at Boulognesur-Mer, France, on January 25, 1841. When eighteen years of age he became a pupil in the Conservatoire, Paris. The next step in his professional life was to membership in the Comedie-Francaise. With the exception of occasional tours in provincial France, and appearances in London, always with the support of the eminent actors and actresses who have shared his frequent triumphs at the Theatre Francais, M. Coquelin has had no experience outside of its walls.

Capable critics expatiate on the wonderful range of his well-skilled capabilities, from the broadest to the most delicate comedy, from the tenderest pathos to the most tempestuous declamation; and all this without striking personal advantages, but as the result of extraordinary natural aptitude for his profession, severely trained by close and persistent application.

THAT HUSBAND OF MINE.

MRS. CAUDLE HAS VERY MANY AD MIRERS NOWADAYS.

The Women in Varying Moods-Some Full of Happiness, 'ome Not so Sure About It-How to Pick a Husband That Will Pan Out Wel!-Don't Jump at Any Fel-

Some days ago we, following the example of the Winnipeg Sun, published the following questions, directed to the married representative sof the fair sex : 1. What kind of a husband have you?

2. Is he cross, sulky, stingy and mean? Or is he liberal, open-hearted, generous and kind to yourself and children?

3. Does he spend his evenings at home, and if not why not? Does he belong to the lodge, and how often does it meet each week?

4. Has married life been all that you expected it to be?

5. If there has been any disappointment what has been the cause of it? 6. Does the case admit of remedy, and what do you think the remedy should be? 7. Have you any suggestions to offer to such of your sex as contemplate marriage! What is your advice to them ere they have taken a decisive step? And the replies so far received we present

He Has His Own Way.

KINGSTON, March 24 .- (To the Editor:) I've been married a few months and I can assure you I have a grand husband. He treats me as if I was a queen. But now and then I often ask myself, "Can this thing last?" If I believed all that other married women said I would be fearful of disappointment. Of course I let him have his own way, and he is happy. Must I always let him run ?- PAULINE.

A Man With Three Faults, KINGSTON, March 25 .- (To the Editor) : I haven't time to answer your questions in rotation, and I don't think any other wife can if she has a baby and a batch of bread to watch at the same time. But I want to tell you I have a good husband, except in three particulars. He wants me to light the fires in the mornings, to have his meals as regular as clock work, and to fill the premises full of smoke. If he sees this letter-and you may be sure he will -I hope there may be some reformation. He was a hotel boarder before I married him, and I guess that accounts for his whims. - ONE WHO'S BEEN THERE.

One Who Has Been Deceived.

KINGSTON, March 25. - (To the Editor): 1 am a disappointed wife. I had a lover who spent lots of money on me, who crowded candy upon me, and who generally gave me a whirl. I married him, but, presto! a change! He cut down the allowance for housekeeping, said candy made me unwell, and generally treats me as though I was a hired girl. He has given me a good house, finely furnished, but when I have to sit in it alone I just wish I was unmarried. Every night he is full of business, and after swallowing his tea dashes off. When I ask him about his actions and complain of his neglect he only says : "Well I have two mouths to look after now, and I haven't time to make love to you. Haven't you all you want ?" And I cry like a big simpleton, and then he gets mad. I just wish I was a girl until I was fifty years old. If the girls only knew they'd not be breaking their necks for the deceitful men. - A SAD Wo-

Just United to Each Other.

KINGSTON, March 25. - (To the Editor) Marriage is one of God's institutions and should, I think, be most seriously contemplated. It is the duty of mothers, with years of experience on their side, to see that their daughters do not commit the follies in to which so many dip. The choice of life should be carefully made. It means perpetual peace and happiness, or perpetual misery and despair-sometimes ever more. I am glad to say that I have been married to one whom I understand and whose life, in almost every respect, has been a fulfillment of every expectation. My experience may be exceptional, but it may be the experience of most women if they exercise their judgment aright. A man whose conduct is faulty in youth, who allows himself to drift into all manner of bad habits, who is disrespectful of parents and friends, selfish and vicious and dissipated, is in a fair way of going to predition, and for a young woman to link her fate with his, knowingly, with her eyes open, is to commit a blunder which she will never cease to lament. I didn't ask my husband if he had wealth, a passport to society, and credit at the tailor shop. Wealth can do a great deal to promote the welfare of a wise man, but wealth is worthless to one who is without character. A good name is better than riches. In tastes, desires, and practices our lives have been singularly harmonious, and I attribute such results to the fact that our dispositions are adapted to each other, that we are seeking to live for the good we can do each other and those we come in contact with. Girls have a great responsibility resting upon them. It is difficult for them to read the character of the men who pay them suit, but it can be done in time, in nine cases out of ten, and it will pay to hesitate about taking a step so momentious. To marry in haste means to repent at leisure. It has been said that nearly one-half of the marriages of to-day are unfortunate alliances, and I am forced to believe that the statement is true. - Comport.

A Very Decided Opinion.

KINGSTON, March 25.—(To the Editor) And so you want to know what kind of a husband I have-whether he's mean, stingy, hot tempered, etc.? I won't tell you. I don't think its anybody's business but my own. He suits me, and it is a matter of indifference to me, and I suppose to you, what other people think about him. I would not tell upon him oven if he had faults, for if I could not cure him I would not ask anyone else to operate upon him. I don't believe in laying before the public things which the public have no business to know. I don't believe in washing any dirty linen before the world. I haven't any to wash, of that kind, but I wouldn't wash it outdoors if I had. The idea of women putting in the paper the tittle-tattle that goes on in their houses. Its really ridiculous And I have no doubt some of them will be at it. I see that you have a lot of correspondence already. Well, I just pity the poor fellows that find themselves joined to such jades. For better or for worse! That was the contract, and I guess the men got more than they contracted for. No wonder some women don't find married life a bed of roses. They are themselves to blame. They don't make their homes pleasant. There is no sunshine about them, nothing to make a man feel contended, nothing to interest him, attract him, hold him in the house. Men have to be amused or interested in some way, and so go to the lodge and theatre or the club-if they are left enough money to pay for their admission to any or all of these places. And just because the men will not sit about and look cheerful while everything in the house is cheerless their wives think they have changed so much that they are not what they used to be, and they must run off to the papers and tell all they know. Nice wives these are to be sure. I try to make my home pleasant, give my hus-band a chance to smile, get him what he wants, let him read or smoke as the mood moves him, and keep the scandal mongers out. "That husband of mine" is all right and I intend to keep him right. - A. Woman Who MINDS HER OWN BUSINESS.

What Changed Them So?

KINGSTON, March 25. - (To the Editor) : did not intend to write, thinking it indelicate to do so, but coming to think over it it will do my husband good to say what I think about him. Of course he will be sure to read it, as everybody reads the WHIG. was a widow when my husband and I met. It was at a kettle-drum, and I don't think I ever enjoyed myself so much. He paid me particular attention, and seemed to have been drawn towards me irresistably. After that I couldn't keep him away. He haunted me continually, and hung about me all the time, pleading that he adored me and couldn't live out of my sight. I had gone through this experience before, and did all I could to test his ardour. My conduct towards him was enough sometimes to freeze his blood, and I surrendered. Would you believe it that within six months a great change came over him. Mind you he's not ugly, or mean, or bad tempered, but he seems to be buried in thought all the time, and communes with himself instead of me. I can't be giddy and I do not think he would like me to be giddy if I would. I want to talk : he wants to indulge in what he calls reveries. I like to hear the gossip of the town ; he says he doesn't like gossip. I enjoy an evening promenade; he says he's too tired to walk, though he didn't appear to be tired while he courted me, and his occupation is just the same. I like to go to the theatre : he says he doesn't, and more than that he can't afford it. I like to spend a day now and then with my aunt; he says he has nothing to say against her, but that he doesn't pine for her company. Thus you see how how different are our tastes. My husband is not bad, but he is not what I thought he was, and unless we get a little more sociable I really will regret that we married. I don't want to think like this, but I can't help it. Worse than all, the folks don't seem to like my husband, and we are not asked out to the parties any more. I don't care about them myself, think they were awfully stupid affairs, but I don't like the people to suppose that they are not our style. - A QUIZZICAL JUDE.
