Meritorious Jubilee Verses.

The London Truth recently started a competition for verses suitable as jubilee additions to the national anthem, and an immense number of verses were sent it. Some of these were really excellent as metrical compositions. Among those published as the best was the following, by Mr. Edward Harris, of London, Ont., a brother to Mrs. Griffin, of Kingston:

The di-tant lands we hold, Guide her to make one fold, One flag, one speech!

Let mind and man be free, Refine barbarity, And peaceful liberty, Let Britain teach.

SUICIDES OF GREAT MEN.

Thomas Todd Tells How Some Noted Men Have Died. [Special Correspondence.]

NEW YORK, April 6. Suicide seems to be on the increase, and the number of public men who have committed felo de se runs well up in the tens. Lieutenant Governor Reynolds' suicide by throwing himself down the elevator shaft in the St. Louis custom house last week is no stranger than that of Preston King, who drowned himself in the Hudson river by leaping from a ferryboat, or that of Felix McConell, of Mississippi, who, after a long spree, cut his throat in the Charles hotel, in Washington. It is still a question in the minds of many whether Edwin M. Stanton did not die in the same way. It was stated at the time that he died suddenly, but it was whispered that the cause of his death was a cut in his throat which was made by his own hand. Stanton's messenger, who still works in the war department, says that he aided in the preparation of Stanton for burial, and that there was no mark upon his throat. Gen. Joe Lane, who was so noted during the Kansas troubles, killed himself within a few weeks of his 51st birthday. Politics, it is said, was the cause of his death. The uncle of John D. White, who was the speaker of the Twenty-seventh congress, committed suicide at Richmond, Ky., by cutting his throat. Jesse Thomas, once a senator from Illinois, suicided in the same manner in 1850. An Ohio congressman named Stone, having become a defaulter, committed suicide in 1865, and went to the cemetery to die. He was found lying dead upon the graves of his children. John Ewing, an Indiana congressman, died in 1857 at Vincennes. He was found sitting in his chair, with a sheet of paper upon which the ink was still fresh lying beside him, the words upon which were evidently penned just before his death. These words were: Here lies a man who loved his friends, His God, his country and Vincennes. Thomas Jefferson Rusk, of Texas, committed suicide after leaving the senate, away back in the thirties. He shot himself, and the cause of his death has always been involved in mystery. Congressman Hise, of the Thirty-ninth congress, who was once United States minister to Guatemala, committed suicide on account of insanity resulting from overwork. Williamson R. W. Cobb, of Alabama, left the congress of the United States in 1861 to become a member of the Confederate congress. He died by a pistol shot from his own weapon, but whether the discharge of the pistol was accidental or not is not known.

There were in the United States, according to the census of 1880, during the decade following the year 1870, over 2,500 suicides, of whom 2,104 were men and 497 were women. It is thought, however, that this estimate is much below the real number, and a life insurance company kept the account of the suicides reported in the daily papers for a period of four years. It was found that 6,283 suicides were reported from February, 1882, to February, 1886. Of this number 471 were men and 1,315 batchelors. Two thousand and fifty-three were husbands and 568 were wives; so that the women in every case seem to have had the best of it. The suicides were the more numerous among the farmers, and, by the way, the insane asylums contain a larger proportion of farmers than men of any other class.

Suicide was not considered a crime among many of the ancient nations, and Demosthenes, Themistocles and Hannibal ended their lives in this way. Mark Antony killed himself, and his sweetheart, Cleopatra, put the poisonous asp to her breast. The Bible tells how Samson pulled down the house upon himself in order that he might destroy his enemies, how King Saul impaled himself upon his sword, and how Judas Iscariot in his repentance committed suicide. Mithridates killed himself rather than be a prisoner. Cato, rather than live under the despotism of Caesar, stabbed himself. He fainted, his wound was dressed, and he was on the road to recovery. As soon as he was able he tore off the bandages, let out his entrails, and expired. Brutus killed himself, and Zeno, the founder of the Stoics, hanged himself at the ripe old age of 98. Diogenes declared that the nearer to suicide the nearer to virtue, and Lucretius and the epicureans highly commended suicide.

The epidemic nature of suicide is worthy of remark, and it is a curious thing that peculiar suicides bring on others of the same character. A few days after the Ashtabula bridge disaster the engineer committed suicide by shooting himself with a pistol through the mouth. Within several weeks there were a number of suicides of this same nature in different parts of the United States, and the same is true of any peculiar form of suicide. In 1793 there were 1,300 suicides at Versailles, and the disease became almost as epidemic as though it had been the cholera. In 1506, 60 people killed themselves at Rouen. The French have always been noted for felo de se.

Life Abroad.

Gentleman (looking for a summer residence in New Jersey)-Are you troubled with mosquitoes very much? Jersey Landlord (reassuringly)-Oh, no, sir. Occasionally they show up about the yard, but they are not allowed in the house.-New York Sun.

The Eagle's Cave.

For thirteen years an eagle has made her nest in a cave near Santa Rosa, Cal., and reared her young. As soon as they are old enough to care for themselves she disappears and is not seen again until the next year. The young do not follow her, but stay in the neighborhood until shot or driven away. In the spring, when she comes to build her nest she flies directly over the cave for several days, flying a little lower each day until at last she reaches the cave. After this, perhaps, she is not again seen for a week, when she comes out in search of food.-New York Sun.
