since we were a nation. Grandest fleet the world ever saw. Sail on before all ages! Run up all the colors! Ring the bells! Yes, open all the port holes! Unlimber the guns and load and fire one great broadside that shall shake the continents in honor of peace and the eternity of the American union!

But I lift my hand, and the scene has vanished. Many of the ships have dropped under the crystal pavement of the deep, sea monsters swimming in and out the forsaken cabin, and other old craft have swung into the navy yards and many of the brave spirits who trod their decks and gone up to the Eternal fortress, from whose casements and embrasures may we not hope they look down to-day with joy upon a nation in reunited brotherhood!

At this annual commemoration I think that most of you who were in the naval service during our late war are now in the afternoon or evening of life. With some of you it is 2 o'clock, 3 o'clock, 4 o'clock, 6 o'clock, and it will soon be sundown.

If you were of age when the war broke out you are now at least 48. Many of you have passed into the sixties and the seventies; therefore it is appropriate that I hold two great lights for your illumination—the example of Christian admirals consecrated to Christ and their country—Admiral Foote and Admiral Farragut.

Had the Christian religion been a cowardly thing they would have had nothing to do with it. In its faith they lived and died. In our Brooklyn navy yard Admiral Foote held prayer meetings and conducted a revival on the receiving ship North Carolina, and on Sabbaths, far out at sea, followed the chaplain with religious exhortation. In early life, on board the sloop of war Natchez, impressed by the words of a Christian sailor, he gave his spare time for two weeks to the Bible, and at the end of that declared openly: "Henceforth, under all circumstances, I will act for God." His last words, while dying at the Astor house, New York, were: "I thank God for all his goodness to me. He has been very good to me." When he entered heaven he did not have to run a blockade, for it was amid the cheers of a great welcome. The other Christian admiral will be honored until the day when the fires from above shall lick up the waters from beneath and there shall be no more sea.

Oh, while old ocean's breast
Bears a white sail,
And God's soft stars to rest
Guide through the gale,
Mea will him never forget.
Old heart of oak,
Farragut! Farragut!
Thunderbolt strokes!

According to his own statement, Farragut was very loose in his morals in early manhood, and practiced all kinds of sin. One day he was called into the cabin of his father, who was a shipmaster. His father said: "David, what are you going to be, anyhow?" He answered: "I am going to follow the sea." "Follow the sea," said the father, "and be kicked about the world and die in a foreign hospital!" "No," said David, "I am going to command, like you." "No," said the father, "a boy of your habits will never command anything," and his father burst into tears and left the cabin. From that day David Farragut started on a new life. Capt. Pennington, an honored elder of this church, was with him in most of his battles and had his intimate friendship, and he confirms, what I had heard elsewhere, that Farragut was good and a Christian. In every great crisis of life he asked and obtained the divine direction. When in Mobile bay the monitor Tennessee sank from a torpedo and the great war ship Brooklyn, that was to lead the squadron, turned back he said he was at a loss to know whether to advance or retreat, and he says: "I prayed: 'Oh, God, who created man and gave him reason, direct me what to do. Shall I go on? And a voice commanded me: 'Go on, and I went on.' Was there ever a more touching Christian letter than that which he wrote to his wife from his flagship Hartford? 'My dearest wife, I write and leave this letter to you. I am going into Mobile bay in the morning, if God is my leader, and I hope he is, and in him I place my trust. If he thinks it is the proper place for me to die I am ready to submit to his will in that as all other things. God bless and preserve you, my darling, and my dear boy, if anything should happen to me, may his blessings rest upon you and your dear mother and all your sisters and their children.'

Cheerful to the end, he said on board the Tallapoosa in the last voyage he ever took: "It would be well if I died now in harness." The sublime Episcopal service for the dead was never more appropriately read than over his casket, and well did all the forts in New York harbor thunder as his body was brought to our wharf, and well did the minute guns sound and the bells toll as in a procession having in its ranks the president of the United States and his cabinet, and the mighty men of land and sea, the old admiral was carried amid hundreds of thousands of uncovered heads on Broadway and laid on his pillow of dust in beautiful Woodlawn, Sept. 30, amid the pomp of our autumnal forests.

Ye veterans who sailed and fought under him, take your admiral's God and Christ for your God and Christ. After a few more conflicts you too will rest. For the few remaining fights with sin, and death, and hell make ready. Strip your vessel for the fray; hang the sheet chains over the side. Send down the topgallant masts. Barricade the wheel. Rig in the flying jib boom. Steer straight for the shining shore, and hear the shout of the great Commander of earth and heaven as he cries from the shrouds: "To him that overcometh, will I give to eat of the tree of life which is in the midst of the paradise of God."

English Official Stipendiary.
Some persons are skeptical about contentions, but the English commissioners of customs are not. There was a clerk in their department who retired on a pension forty-two years ago. The confiding board went on paying the annuity till last month, by which time the annuitant was apparently 109 years old. This abnormal longevity does not seem to have induced the commissioners to make inquiries. If they had done so they would have discovered that the nominal recipient of the pension had been dead thirty-five years, and that the money was really going to his son, a mere junior of 79. It is almost a pity that the fraud has been found out, says The Fall Mall Gazette. It would have been interesting to see how long the customs board would have gone on paying the pension. Perhaps about 1300 or thereabouts, when the pensioner would have been 150 years old, they might have begun to grow suspicious.—Boston Herald.

A HISTORICAL PAINTING.

A Panorama of the Crucifixion Being Put on Canvas in Chicago.

A panoramic studio at the corner of Seventh and Wells streets is witnessing at present the growth, under the intelligent direction of Messrs. Lohr and Heine, of a painting which will surpass, when completed, anything in the way of panoramic paintings yet exhibited. The subject chosen is the crucifixion of the Christ, and it is being worked out on a scale commensurate with the importance of the event. While termed a panorama, it will be really a historical painting of the greatest value and importance. The immense canvas, 50x400 feet, gives room for a breadth of treatment such as few artists are allowed. The work is being carefully done in oil, with an attention to finish and minutiae of detail not exceeded in a picture destined for the salon.

The time chosen for representation is soon after the sixth hour. The place is some distance to the west of the walls. On the bare, bleak knoll stand the three crosses, with their pitiful hanging figures. That to the right of the Christ as the spectator faces the scene faces front, while that on the left is turned inward, toward the other two. Standing about the top of the knoll are the Roman soldiery and the haughty high priest in his robes of office, surrounded by his attendants, while the hills and declivities right and left are covered by a countless throng, all gazing toward the scene of earth's deepest tragedy.

To the rear of the knoll, with its ghastly burdens, and rising until its purpling summit touches the blackening clouds, is the Mount of Olives. To the right, using the knoll as a central point, is the proud city, with its temples, palaces and close clustering white houses. Around its lower corner runs the road to Bethlehem. Facing the knoll across the valley is an old well, past which runs the road to Joppa, while off to the left is the dusty trail leading to Damascus, down which the caravans with their priceless treasures go. Over all is the chill of gathering blackness.

The dominating feature, however, beyond the barren, sandy wastes, beyond the bleak, brown hills, beyond even the gathering shadows, is people. Everywhere there is people, Jews, Galileans, Asiatics, Ethiopians, Egyptians, men of every nation on earth, covering the ground like a moving blanket, their eyes focused on one point.

The great painting is, however, far from complete. Two months more of steady work by the twelve artists engaged will be needed before the last touches will be put to the canvas. Four months already have been consumed in bringing it to its present stage. Two months alone were employed in painting studies from models. The draperies used were brought from the Holy Land by the artists. Stuffs reaching thousands of dollars in value lie in promiscuous confusion about the great studio or hang in picturesque disarray from unused steam coils.—Chicago Times.

Meanest Man in the State.
The champion mean man of Shamokin is employed within 200 yards of The Dispatch office. A premium will be paid for his equal, if one can be found in thirty-eight states. He is meaner than the man who didn't cross his t's or dot his i's to save ink, and beside him the fellow who stole the pennies from the eyes of his dead grandmother is a prince of generosity.

Several days ago the champion mean man induced a little boy to buy two copies of The Dispatch for one cent—the rate charged newsboys. The champion mean man found another bird something like himself who agreed to pay one cent per week for the privilege of reading one of the papers and returning it the next morning. After reading the other copy himself the champion caused the little boy to return the two papers to this office and receive for them two more copies in exchange on the following day—as unsold copies—the regular custom in all newspaper offices. By this means the champion not only secured his own reading free, every day, but he made a cent every week in addition. Entries can be made from other states—Jersey included—from now until rum and music get on intimate terms again.—Shamokin Dispatch.

Holloway's Ointment and Pills.
The soothing properties of these medicines render them well worthy of trial in all diseases of the respiratory organs. In common colds and influenza the pills taken internally, and the ointment rubbed over the chest and throat, are exceedingly efficacious. When influenza is epidemic this treatment is the easiest, safest and surest. Holloway's Pills purify the blood, remove all obstacles to its free circulation through the lungs, relieve the engorged air tubes, and render respiration free, without reducing the strength, irritating the nerves, or depressing the spirits; such are the ready means of escaping from suffering when afflicted with colds, coughs, bronchitis, and chest complaints, by which the health of so many is seriously and permanently injured in most countries.

An Open Letter.
Nov. 25th, 1888.—Messrs. T. Mrs. Edward Romkey, Eastern Passage, Halifax, N.S.
